includes essays by some of today's leading anthropologists working in development studies furthers the goals of both poverty reduction and ethnographic research by detailing their contributions to and reliance on each other provides a practical and theoretical resource for development agencies policy makers and students wishing to access a variety of case studies and new analytical approaches the success of any international development agency depends on an understanding of the ways in which a community and individuals relate to ideas and resources david lewis and david mosse have brought together a number of anthropologists engaged in development research to show how ethnography can be an indispensable tool for understanding these complex and dynamic relationships the world that this ethnography of development reveals does not divide neatly into the developers and the developed perpetrators and victims domination and resistance or the incompatible rationalities of scientific and indigenous knowledge it is a world in which interests and practices are always hybrids where the realms of reason and the real world are not neatly separate and in which rational policy representations frequently conceal the messiness of practice that precedes the ideas and technologies of development the wealth of new ideas offered in this collection will be especially valuable to graduate students in anthropology and development studies but also to undergraduates and those working in development organizations who wish to run more effective operations on every level other contributors tim bending bina desai amity doolittle pierre yves le meur peter luetchford wiebe nauta sergio rosendo benedetta rossi oscar salemink and celayne heaton shrestha critiques the very essence of development policy especially the complex relationship between policy and practice and role of participation by focusing in detail on the activities of a development project in tribal western india over more than ten years as it falls under different policy regimes this book takes a close look at the relationship between policy and practice in development anthropological interest in new subjects of research and contemporary knowledge practices has turned ethnographic attention to a wide ranging variety of professional fields among these the encounter with international development has perhaps been longer and more intimate than any of the others anthropologists have drawn critical attention to the interfaces and social effects of development s discursive regimes but oddly enough have paid scant attention to knowledge producers themselves despite anthropologists being among them this is the focus of this volume it concerns the construction and transmission of knowledge about global poverty and its reduction but is equally interested in the social life of development professionals in the capacity of ideas to mediate relationships in networks of experts and communities of aid workers and in the dilemmas of maintaining professional identities going well beyond obsolete debates about pure and applied anthropology the book examines the transformations that occur as social scientific concepts and practices cross and re cross the boundary between anthropological and policy making knowledge
