seminar paper from the year 2017 in the subject art history of art grade 2 3 university of lisbon language english abstract this paper analyzes the beginnings of the so called human zoos in the late 19th and early 20th century and whether there are still continuities of these practices in the present world what are the consequences what are the impacts it will further look into the example of sarah baartman who was objectified and exhibited 1810 to 1815 in order to illustrate the horrible fates of people on display in europe are human beings still exhibited and exploited in the way they used to be the south african artist brett bailey made an attempt to spread awareness of the highly popular human zoos with his show exhibit b the show was received very controversial by the public and in london the show even had to be cancelled due to the dimensions of the protests the question is whether by re creating scenes of slavery his show is able to provide a critique of racism and human zoos or whether it is a mere reproduction of human zoos that is racist in itself it is in the nature of human kind to be curious and to observe things that are new to the eye only by observation can be recognized whether something is a danger or not the unusual thus always exerts a strong appeal to the observer the exotic has always attracted attention this even more when an unfamiliar looking or exotic human being is concerned a being that seems very familiar to the viewer and possibly even shows him similarities to himself this is one of the reasons why wild people have been displayed at fun fairs and exhibitions during centuries and since traveling was dangerous or not possible at all and a worldwide media network did not exist these exhibitions were often the only opportunity to see people from far away in real life it is hardly surprising that this natural interest in the stranger has quickly been utilized by some people for their own benefit whether to generate attention to demonstrate power or to generate economic profits
