This revised edition of the book first published in 1971 comprises an expanded introduction that reviews recent research in this area and a new imprint of the original text which has been edited afresh to slightly abbreviate some parts. The theme of this work may be summed up as the economic aspects of the theory and practice of the colonial state. The focus is upon the ideas and interests and contestations which went into the making of the policies of the Raj in the formative period following 1857, the years which saw the appointment of the first Finance Minister of India, then called the Finance Member, the introduction of the budget system and other innovations like the paper currency and income tax.

Part of the Labour Governments 1964-70 series, this text concentrates on Britain's international policy during Harold Wilson's Labour Governments in the 1960s. The coverage ranges from defence policy and the government machine to European integration, NATO, and the Vietnam War. Harold Wilson and his ministers have often been accused of betraying the sense of promise that greeted their victory in 1964. Using recently released archival evidence, Young argues that a more balanced view of the government should recognize the real difficulties that surrounded decision making not only on Vietnam but also on Aden, the Nigerian Civil War, and Rhodesia. Tensions and the need to placate allies all placed limits on what a once great but clearly declining power could achieve. Furthermore, the government proved of pivotal importance in the history of Britain's international role in that it presided over a major shift of focus from positions east of Suez to European concerns, a focus that has remained until the present day. International relations during this exciting period, together with the other books in the series on domestic and economic policy, it provides a complete picture of the development of Britain under the premiership of Harold Wilson.
