After the Treaty of Paris ended the Seven Years War in 1763, British America stretched from Hudson Bay to the Florida Keys from the Atlantic coast to the Mississippi River and across new islands in the West Indies. To better rule these vast dominions, Britain set out to map its new territories with unprecedented rigor and precision. Max Edelson's The New Map of Empire pictures the contested geography of the British Atlantic world and offers new explanations of the causes and consequences of Britain's imperial ambitions in the generation before the American Revolution. Under orders from King George III to reform the colonies, the Board of Trade dispatched surveyors to map far-flung frontiers, chart coastlines in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, sound Florida's rivers, parcel tropical islands into plantation tracts, and mark boundaries with indigenous nations across the continental interior. Scaled to military standards of resolution, the maps they produced sought to capture the essential attributes of colonial spaces: their natural capacities for agriculture, navigation, and commerce, and give British officials the knowledge they needed to take command over colonization. From across the Atlantic, Britain's vision of imperial control threatened to displace colonists as meaningful agents of empire and diminished what they viewed as their greatest historical accomplishment: settling the new world. As London's mapmakers published these images of order in breathtaking American atlases, continental and British forces were already engaged in a violent contest over who would control the real spaces they represented. Accompanying Edelson's innovative spatial history of British America are online visualizations of more than 250 original maps, plans, and charts.

A butterfly can flutter its wings over a flower in China and cause a hurricane in the Caribbean. Robert Redford's character in the movie Havana, although a butterfly flapping its wings on one side of the world cannot actually cause a hurricane on the other side, the metaphor of how things are connected is a powerful one. At the core of this connectivity is history. Learning history is all about connections: connections to the past and connections to each other. Knowing what happened in the past helps make sense of our present. Knowing how we fit into the larger global history helps us connect to others. Knowing our heritage gives us a place to belong. History even gives us a basis to determine future actions. Currently, the world has become a global community, making global history all the more pressing. The goal of this curriculum is for students to learn the stories of history to understand in broad terms what happened and how events can be connected we do not expect students to memorize dates names and places at this level but rather aim for the student to have a broad understanding of the islamic history in a global context our history connections spans for the ancients to the modern era every year students will take a chunk of this history in the first book students will cover from creation to about 500 c e in the second book they will cover from 500 c e until about 1650 c e the third era will cover from 1650 c e until the industrial revolution approximately 1850 c e the last era the modern era will cover from 1850 c e until our current day the four books in this curriculum are consecutive and follow each other up not only in chronological information but also in building up skills the fourth book is best suited for primary students in grade 3 and 4 or older because the subjects include many abstract concepts the modern era history is a highly politicized era and emotions can run high on many of the topics we have attempted to give a balanced overview of the global history during this era without losing our focus on what happened to the ummah the ummah is globally spread out with the highest concentrations of muslims living in the middle east the middle east is an area highly contested with many conflicting groups of people the rise of concepts such as democracy nationalism development and industrialization often have replaced the religion as the main driving force of forming communities pushing the deen as such more to the background nonetheless we will focus on what is happening in countries where the majority of people are muslim as part of our ummah this is the workbook that accompanies the textbook all pages are perforated for easy use includes wall sized map
