in a knowledge driven economy those without at least a high school diploma will be far more limited in their work prospects than those with one but scholars and educators disagree on the rate of graduation in u s high schools some new statistics seriously understate minority graduation rates and fail to reflect the tremendous progress in the last few decades in closing the black white and the hispanic white graduation gaps rethinking high school graduation rates and trends analyzes the current sources of available data on high school completion and dropout rates and finds that while graduation rates need much improvement they are higher and getting better

abstract this study examines the influence of personal and family background attributes economic and locational factors school characteristics and educational experiences and certain student behaviors and choices on the decision to leave high school before graduation special attention is given to intergroup differences attempting to sort out the factors responsible for disparities between male and female and among white black and hispanic dropout rates these analyses which employ both the descriptive statistics and the multivariate event history method are based on data from the high school and beyond survey of the sophomore class of 1980
