important parts of development practice especially in key institutions such as the world bank are dominated by economists in contrast development studies is largely based upon multidisciplinary work in which anthropologists human geographers sociologists and others play important roles hence a tension has arisen between the claims made by development economics to be a scientific measurable discipline prone to wide usage of mathematical modelling and the more discursive practice based approach favoured by development studies the aim of this book is to show how the two disciplines have interacted as well as how they differ this is crucial in forming an understanding of development work and to thinking about why policy recommendations can often lead to severe and continuing problems in developing countries this book introduces development economics to those coming from two different but linked perspectives economists and students of development who are not economists in both explaining and critiquing development economics the book is able to suggest the implications of these findings for development studies and more broadly for development policy and its outcomes deciding when and how to retire are among the most important decisions most people make can they be depended on to plan with foresight and make sound decisions according to standard economic analysis the answer is a qualified yes but studies by psychologists sociologists and economists themselves raise doubts about this comforting appraisal this volume by analysts trained in economics and other disciplines suggests that retirement planning and decisions fall far short of the rational ideal gary burtless explains what economic research has to say about retirement behavior annamaria lusardi reports that many people in their fifties and older say they have not even thought about retirement matthey rabin and ted o donoghue show that procrastination can cause huge economic losses robert axtell and joshua epstein show that herd behavior explains observed patterns of retirement behavior better than does the assumption of rational decisionmaking george loewenstein drazen prelec and roberto weber report that many people incorrectly anticipate what retirement will be like and rationalize whatever decision they have made david fetherstonhaugh and lee ross report experimental evidence that the effect of social security provisions may depend on how these policies are framed as well as on the specific content of those policies these and other authors also explore the broader implications of these behavioral patterns copublished with russell sage foundation
