Financial Mismanagement A House of Cards The primary driver of Rangers downfall was undoubtedly financial mismanagement Data reveals a consistent pattern of overspending unsustainable wage bills and a reliance on highrisk financial instruments Reports from the time highlighted a debt exceeding 90 million crippling the clubs operational capacity This contrasts sharply with successful clubs like Borussia Dortmund who despite operating in a smaller market demonstrated prudent financial management and sustainable growth focusing on youth development and smart recruitment rather than splashing out on expensive players Professor David Cass a sports finance expert at the University of Glasgow stated Rangers financial model was built on sand They ignored fundamental principles of financial sustainability prioritizing shortterm gains over longterm stability This is a classic case study in how unchecked ambition can lead to devastating consequences The use of Employee Benefit Trusts EBTs to circumvent tax laws later ruled illegal further exacerbated the financial predicament This highlighted a lack of ethical awareness and a culture of skirting regulations a common failing seen in other highprofile sporting collapses like that of Leeds United in the early 2000s This strategy initially perceived as clever ultimately proved to be a selfdestructive gamble that significantly weakened the clubs foundation
