a revised and updated edition of the acclaimed wall street journal bestseller that explores why some leaders drain capability and intelligence from their teams while others amplify it to produce better results we ve all had experience with two dramatically different types of leaders the first type drains intelligence energy and capability from the people around them and always needs to be the smartest person in the room these are the idea killers the energy sappers the diminishers of talent and commitment on the other side of the spectrum are leaders who use their intelligence to amplify the smarts and capabilities of the people around them when these leaders walk into a room light bulbs go off over people s heads ideas flow and problems get solved these are the leaders who inspire employees to stretch themselves to deliver results that surpass expectations these are the multipliers and the world needs more of them especially now when leaders are expected to do more with less in this engaging and highly practical book leadership expert liz wiseman explores these two leadership styles persuasively showing how multipliers can have a resoundingly positive and profitable effect on organizations getting more done with fewer resources developing and attracting talent and cultivating new ideas and energy to drive organizational change and innovation in analyzing data from more than 150 leaders wiseman has identified five disciplines that distinguish multipliers from diminishers these five disciplines are not based on innate talent indeed they are skills and practices that everyone can learn to use even lifelong and recalcitrant diminishers lively real world case studies and practical tips and techniques bring to life each of these principles showing you how to become a multiplier too whether you are a new or an experienced manager this revered classic has been updated with new examples of multipliers as well as two new chapters one on accidental diminishers and one on how to deal with diminishers just imagine what you could accomplish if you could harness all the energy and intelligence around you multipliers will show you how when immigrants arrive in a new country they are confronted with new labour market requirements such as language proficiency familiarity with job search procedures and work practices which they are not always able to satisfy over time this expertise can be acquired and in principle immigrant performance in the receiving country should be similar to that of the native born in practice however differences persist experience and qualifications may not be fully recognised social capital may be lacking or discriminatory hiring practices may persist among employers these obstacles affect not only new immigrants but surprisingly their children too even if the children are born and educated in the receiving country what can be done to improve the labour market integration of immigrants and their children employers need to have the necessary information and incentives to assess the skills and qualifications of immigrants properly governments have a role to play in promoting language and vocational training and encouraging diversity in the workplace immigrants themselves must accept the requirements of the host country employers the viability of future migration policies in particular greater recourse to immigration will depend to a large extent on how successful oecd countries and immigrants are in achieving these objectives this publication presents reviews of the labour market integration of immigrants and their children in four oecd countries australia denmark germany and sweden and provides country specific recommendations it is the first in a series which will eventually cover some ten oecd countries this three chapter compilation examines the theoretical and empirical implications of occupation specific human capital as it relates to current labor economics research the first chapter demonstrates that acknowledging occupational specificity in the human capital model allows for a reconciliation of a long standing theoretical dispute regarding the role of occupation in the labor market the second chapter extends the literature by estimating the cross occupation transferability of human capital using data on the knowledge skills and abilities utilized in each vocation these estimates are then applied to verify displaced blue collar manufacturing workers as structural victims given lower rates of human capital application in their new occupations compared to others displaced in the labor market the third chapter investigates the relationship between high school employment and post school economic outcomes as it uses occupation specific human capital principles to dismiss the notion that in school employment provides the marketable skills necessary to stimulate post school economic gains
