Winner of the Planning Institute of Australia's 2015 Cutting Edge Research and Teaching Award, Australians from all walks of life have begun to realise the nation's cities cannot sustain profligate growth indefinitely. Dwindling water supplies, failing food bowls, increased energy costs, more severe bushfires, severe storms, flooding, coastal erosion, rising transport expenses, housing shortages and environmental pollution are now daily news headlines. Australia's cities may have reached their ecological limits. A new model for planning the places we live is needed. Understanding the natural cycles of the city is just as important to planning our cities as knowledge of local ordinances. Indeed, much more so. A profound knowledge of environmental processes is critical for successful planning in today's world. Environmental planners take as their guiding principle the concept of designing with nature, approaching cities as living organisms that consume water, energy and raw materials and produce waste. This metabolic view of cities means we can find new solutions to old problems and steer our cities towards a more sustainable form of planning. Written specifically for students and professionals working in city planning in Australia, this ground-breaking new book enables Australian planners, architects and developers to get a better understanding of the fundamental principles of environmental planning for cities, showing how land, water, air, energy, wildlife and people shape our built environments and how, in turn, environmental processes must be better understood if we are to make informed decisions about developing cities that are more sustainable. The book's coverage is comprehensive, from an overview of the concepts and theories of environmental planning through analysis of governance systems and urban environmental processes to agendas and policies for the future. All the key topics are covered in depth, with recommendations for supporting reading and an unrivalled selection of additional materials. Ideal for students, essential for professionals, Australian environmental planning is vital reading for more sustainable cities in a more sustainable world.

In recent years, many nations have asked why not enough housing is being built or when it is built why it isn't of the highest quality or in the best most sustainable locations. Politics, planning and housing supply in Australia, England and Hong Kong examines the politics and planning of new homes in three very different settings but with shared political traditions. In Australia, in England and in Hong Kong, it investigates the power relationships and politics that underpin the allocation of land for large-scale residential schemes and the processes and politics that lead to particular development outcomes. Using a comparative framework, it asks how different systems of urban governance and planning mediate the supply of land for housing, whether and how these system differences influence the location, quantity and price of residential land and the implications for housing outcomes what can be learned from these different systems for allocating land building consensus between different stakeholders and delivering a steady supply of high quality and well located homes accessible to and appropriate for diverse housing needs this book frames each case study in a comprehensive examination of national and territorial frameworks before dissecting key local cases these local cases urban renewal and greenfield growth centres in australia new towns and strategic sites in england and major development schemes in hong kong explore how broader urban planning and housing policy goals play out at the local level while the book highlights a number of potential strategies for improving planning and housing delivery processes the real challenge is to give voice to a broader array of interests reconstituting the political process surrounding planning and housing development to prioritise homes in well planned places for the many rather than simply facilitating investment opportunities for the few
