As editors Toby Litt and Ali Smith explain in their introduction newness is quite a venerable category there's not much that's new about it in the 1930s when a magazine called New Writing was first published it had to compete with New Signatures New Country New Verse the New Statesman and Nation and New Theatre and what with the New Woman of the 1890s and new everything else even then new wasn't the new new if we've achieved diversity it's because our submissions were themselves diverse and the final selection is representative of the proportion of short stories to novel extracts poems and essays that were submitted originality is only proven over time paradoxically we are confident that some of the names here you've never heard before will become very familiar they may even disgrace themselves by winning prizes becoming established etc but they'll be the kinds of writer like the known names published here for whom everything they write is a renewal of language of place of the senses and of the contemporary

Toby Litt is best known for his hip lit fiction which in its sharing of characters and themes across numerous stories and novels has always taken an unusual hybrid form in Mutants he applies his restless creativity to nonfiction the book brings together twenty-six essays on a range of diverse topics including writers and writing and the technological world that informs and underpins it each essay is marked by Litt's distinct voice heedless of formal conventions and driven by a curiosity and a determination to give even the shortest piece enough conceptual heft to make it come alive taken as a whole these pieces unexpectedly cohere into a manifesto of sorts for a weirder wilder more willful fiction praise for Toby Litt a genuinely individual talent with a positive relish for dealing with the contemporary aspects of the modern world Scotsman Toby Litt is awfully good he gives something new every time he writes Muriel Spark he has invented a fresh contemporary style it will sing in the ears of this generation Malcolm Bradbury
