the dramatic handover of hong kong to the people s republic of china on july 1 1997 amid much tension and speculation closes one significant colonial chapter in asia at the same time it also sets the stage for new political and economic possibilities with china closely involved with a key financial center in asia hong kong in china comprises a collection of papers evaluating the situation in hong kong sar over the last two years the handing over of hong kong to china presents a challenge to the legal system which is intrinsically and delicately linked to the political vision of one country two systems while politicians and legalists seek to work out the model the people of hong kong confront the dilemma of an identity crisis on top of the contentious social problems presented by the immigration of chinese mainlanders offshore use of the renminbi expanded rapidly in hong kong sar as china sought to develop an international role for its currency while maintaining capital controls this prompts two questions addressed in this paper how far advanced is renminbi internationalization and what role does chinese capital account liberalization play the first is addressed by testing the extent of integration of offshore and onshore markets for the renminbi using a threshold autoregression tar model and finds that there are substantial unexploited arbitrage opportunities a var model is used to indentify factors contributing to this limited market integration and finds that capital controls and shifts in global market sentiment explain much of the divergence in onshore and offshore renminbi exchange rates to address the second question the paper shows how capital account measures have been used to promote offshore use of the renminbi more actively in the wake of the global financial crisis but that this was done asymmetrically with controls on inflows eased to a greater extent than on outflows it concludes that a more balanced liberalization process will sustain progress in renminbi internationalization
