efforts to fight back against silencing are central to social justice movements and scholarly fields such as feminist and postcolonial studies but claiming to give voice to people who have been silenced always risks appropriating those people s stories lisa propst argues that the british novelist and public intellectual marina warner offers some of the most provocative contemporary interventions into this dilemma tracing her writing from her early journalism to her novels short stories and studies of myths and fairy tales propst shows that in warner s work features such as stylized voices and narrative silences tales that warner s books hint at but never tell question the authority of the writer to tell other people s stories at the same time they demonstrate the power of literature to make new ethical connections between people inviting readers to reflect on whom they are responsible to and how they are implicated in social systems that perpetuate silencing by exploring how to combat silencing through narrative without reproducing it marina warner and the ethics of telling silenced stories takes up an issue crucial not just to literature and art but to journalists policy makers human rights activists and all people striving to formulate their own responses to injustice the rise and fall of the islamic scientific tradition and the relationship of islamic science to european science during the renaissance the islamic scientific tradition has been described many times in accounts of islamic civilization and general histories of science with most authors tracing its beginnings to the appropriation of ideas from other ancient civilizations the greeks in particular in this thought provoking and original book george saliba argues that contrary to the generally accepted view the foundations of islamic scientific thought were laid well before greek sources were formally translated into arabic in the ninth century drawing on an account by the tenth century intellectual historian ibn al naidm that is ignored by most modern scholars saliba suggests that early translations from mainly persian and greek sources outlining elementary scientific ideas for the use of government departments were the impetus for the development of the islamic scientific tradition he argues further that there was an organic relationship between the islamic scientific thought that developed in the later centuries and the science that came into being in europe during the renaissance saliba outlines the conventional accounts of islamic science then discusses their shortcomings and proposes an alternate narrative using astronomy as a template for tracing the progress of science in islamic civilization saliba demonstrates the originality of islamic scientific thought he details the innovations including new mathematical tools made by the islamic astronomers from the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries and offers evidence that copernicus could have known of and drawn on their work rather than viewing the rise and fall of islamic science from the often narrated perspectives of politics and religion saliba focuses on the scientific production itself and the complex social economic and intellectual conditions that made it possible
