preface this volume was conceived as we suspect are many such ventures during an informal conversation in this instance in berlin in december 2014 at the launch of the global delivery initiative all three of us were engaged with different aspects of international development and producing or using case studies with some frequency but we found ourselves noting that while case studies remained widely deployed across the social sciences and that expressions such as the case of were ubiquitous even in everyday speech case studies per se remained in something of a residual methodological space they were popularly conceived as qualitative for example yet one could find many instances in which the constituent elements of a given case in economics were exclusively quantitative or in medicine for example physiological or in law jurisprudential if a singular case was indeed primarily qualitative the key question asked by christian lund of what is this case still remained to answered which logically meant that the case had to be connected in some way empirically theoretically to broader instances or manifestations of a phenomena was this a typical case a randomly selected case an outlier how does one know moreover if a common critique of case studies was either that their underlying methodological quality was highly variable selection bias selecting on the dependent variable or that generalizing from them was at best problematic then there surely needed to be a serious scholarly response to such concerns can causal inferences reasonably be drawn from a single case if so under what conditions in development practice when and how can policymakers reasonably presume that a demonstrably successful intervention in one context might generate similarly impressive outcomes elsewhere or if massively scaled up for their part social science methodologists have in fact made impressive advances on these fronts in recent years yet much of this analysis remains disconnected from development practice and or grounded in comparative cases of large meta categories of country characteristics democracy revolutions constitutions rule of law that is not the unit of analysis at which the vast majority of practitioners think and act about development problems and solutions which is how to design and implement particular policies projects that will achieve particular development objectives for particular groups in particular places despite numerous constraints and likely active political opposition in short we discerned two serious mismatches first between the ubiquity of case studies and their rather loose methodological moorings and second between the epicenter of serious scholarly activity advancing the methodological frontier of case study research producers and the place where most users consumers of case studies at least in development policy and practice actually resided narrowing these twin gaps then became the mission of this book while it draws on our collective experience at the nexus of development research and practice we like to think that the underlying issues are more broadly relevant as such we hope readers engaging with case studies from many different starting points disciplinary base epistemological orientation sectoral specialization or practical concerns will find issues of significance for them discussed in this volume more generally we hope the ideas strategies and challenges outlined herein prompt further advances from both researchers and practitioners on the basis of more fruitful and informed dialogue between them if only because the kinds of questions in play here as elsewhere are unlikely ever to be solved by a lone genius for many years the government played a primary role in the economic development of a country governments across the world became prime movers of economic growth they promoted education technology finance and social infrastructure to provide groundwor
