This book offers a new perspective into the world of international schools and the lucrative industry that accompanies it. It examines how the notion of the global becomes a successful commodity, an important social imaginary, and a valuable identity marker for these communities of privileged migrants and host country nationals. The author invites the reader on an ethnographic journey through an international school community located in Germany, illuminating the central features that define and maintain the sector, including its emphasis on globality, engagement with the concept of third culture kid, and its wider contentious relationship with the local. This book is guided by larger questions pertaining to the education and mobilities of migrant youths and young adults, as well as the notion of what it means to be global today.
