narrating american gender and ethnic identities investigates two major issues within contemporary american studies cultural representations of various minorities ethnic religious sexual and of women in intersectional contexts of race class and sexuality the first part of the volume gender and sexuality in film and literature analyzes different film genres and literary accounts in reference to those aspects of gender and sexuality that are related to identity various cultural texts are discussed from perspectives deriving from feminist gender and lgbt studies intersectionality theories as well as film studies the second part american experiences of ethnic diversity dwells upon ethnic and racial problems of american multicultural society and complex interrelationships between the dominant and the marginalized the center and the periphery it also focuses on the issue of one sun fitting into the dominant culture mainstream politics and canon the book is mostly addressed to scholars and students of american studies but will also be noteworthy to anybody interested in the united states literature and the media selected chapters of this volume can be used as a point of departure for discussions both scholarly and student on contemporary challenges to the idea of multiculturalism the complex role of various intersections e g race ethnicity gender age sexuality religion class disability etc in shaping minority subjectivities as well as feminist responses to and reading of dominant women's literary and filmic representations master's thesis from the year 2010 in the subject politics region southeastern europe grade 1.5 university of bologna and university of sarajevo language english abstract reproductive and labour rights of women are of interest because they are mutually linked and reinforcing firstly it is through reproduction policies and rhetoric that women are limited to their role in preserving the continuance of the nation in turn this serves the benefit of the demographic policies of ethnocracies it is important to note that it is through these policies that hierarchical and patriarchal structures are reinforced as a logical consequence this is supposed to have an impact on the enjoyment of women's labour rights because following this argumentation it is not in the interest of ethnocracies to involve women equally to men into paid labour but rather to reinforce their primary task of reproduction by discriminating them through certain policies related to the labour market this is why the aim of this research is to analyse how these specific politics and policies related to reproduction and labour have affected the enjoyment of certain women's human rights therefore i will first review certain policies and politics of religious and nationalistic leaders to point out what initiatives they have undertaken in regards to women's reproductive rights moreover the thesis will elaborate the enjoyment of women

s social economic rights and cultural rights such as labour rights art 6 cescr and the right to family life art 10 cescr that are set in the international covenant of economic social and cultural rights from 1966 thus it will be of interest to see how women s participation in the labour market has developed within the framework of changing political ideology and whether we can see significant developments not only for the question of whether women are being employed but also about which types of labour women are carrying out performance and performativity are important terms for a theorization of gender and race ethnicity as constitutive of identity this collection reflects the ubiquity diversity and historical locatedness of ethnicity and gender by presenting contributions by an array of international scholars who focus on the representation of these crucial categories of identity across various media including literature film documentary and music video performance the first section political agency stresses instances where the performance of ethnicity gender ultimately aims at a liberating effect leading to more autonomy the second section diasporic belonging explores the different kinds of negotiations of ethnic performances in multi ethnic contexts the third part performances of ethnicity and gender scrutinizes instances of the combined performance of ethnicity and gender in novels films and musical performances the last section cross ethnic traffic contains a number of contributions that are concerned with attempts at crossing over from one ethnicity into another by way of performance this study illustrates some of the factors that contributed to disparate workers joining together in strike activity for shared short term interests in two new york city garment industry strikes the 1885 cloakmakers strike and the 1920 1921 american clothing workers of america lockout and strike are examined as two instances in which alliances across skill ethnicity and gender were possible in the labor movement whether fighting public anti union rhetoric loss of jobs ethnic and gender discrimination illegal piecework and or changes in the structure of the workplace both of these strikes brought temporary gains for workers thus standing out from a history of lost strikes an integrative analysis is employed by combining the roles of identity through a developed conception of transformative solidarity with the model of structures and processes transformative solidarity refers to the process of actors organizing together for short term goals despite differences with priority placed on selective incentives of organizing across difference this integrative approach of structures and transformative solidarity benefits from an historical comparative framework in this historical comparative framework the form of labor organizing in each strike the large scale processes of immigration the national economy and the political economy of new york city are viewed as pivotal in understanding the alliances across gender ethnicity and skill the irish and jewish skilled and unskilled men and women workers in the 1885 cloakmakers strike organized through the principles of craft unionism while the jewish and italian skilled and unskilled women and men of the amalgamated clothing workers of america relied on new unionism for their means of organizing despite temporal differences the use of alternative means for the structure of labor organizing and variance in the large scale processes both strikes were successful emphasis is placed on the variation possible in socio historical conditions that aid in breaking down barriers between diverse workers creating possibilities for temporary alliances the study grapples with a dualism inherent in sociology the division of the individual and society from attention to agency and social structures this dissertation seeks to overcome this dualism through an integrative approach that illustrates the interconnections and mutual reliance on the one hand structures and processes and on the other identity in order to develop a more comprehensive understanding of alliances in the labor movement across workers of varied skill gender and ethnicity
