for decades research on children's literacy has been dominated by questions of how children learn to read especially among anglophone scholars cognitive and psycholinguistic research on reading has been the only approach to studying written language education echoing this debate on methods of teaching children to read have long dominated the educational scene this book presents an alternative view in recent years writing has emerged as a central aspect of becoming literate research in cognitive psychology has shown that writing is a highly complex activity involving a degree of planning unknown in everyday conversational uses of language at the same time developmental studies have revealed that when young children are asked to write they show a surprisingly sophisticated understanding of the representational constraints of alphabetic writing systems they show this understanding long before they can read conventional writing on their own the rich structure of meanings involved in the word-text provided the glue that brought together a group of scholars from several disciplines in an international workshop held in Rome reflecting the state of the field at the time the majority of the workshop participants were scholars working in languages other than English especially the Romance languages their work mirrors a linguistic and psychological research tradition that anglophone scholars knew little of until recently this volume provides English language readers with updated versions of the papers presented at the meeting the topics discussed at the workshop are represented in the chapters as follows the relationship between acquisition of language and familiarity with written texts the reciprocal permeability between spoken and written language the initial phases of text construction by children and the educational conditions that facilitate written language acquisition and writing practice this book explores making of sites as a genre of cultural artefact moving beyond making of documentaries the book analyses novels drama film museum exhibitions and popular studies that re-present the making of culturally loaded film adaptations it argues that the making of genre operates on an adaptive spectrum orienting towards and enacting the adaptation of films and their making the book examines the behaviours that characterise making of sites across visual media it explores the cultural work done by these sites why recognition of making of sites as adaptations matters and why our conception of adaptation matters part one focuses on the adaptive domain presented by the making of John Ford's The Quiet Man part two attends to making of Gone with the Wind sites and concludes with making of The Lord of the Rings texts as the acme of the cultural risks and investments charted in earlier chapters a small town forgotten by maps a river that remembers too much in Ratia near the fading path of the Ghaggar river Arjan believes he is ordinary until the wind begins to listen to him when an ancient relic buried beneath a ruined fort awakens it triggers something older than history itself arjan discovers he is connected to a forgotten legacy of the indus civilization guardians once bound to elemental forces as strange events spread across northern india and another dangerous power stirs beneath the river arjan must confront abilities he never asked for and truths his family buried long ago indus heroes rising winds is the first season in a grounded indian superhero saga blending ancient history modern mystery and emotional coming of age storytelling this is not a story about chosen ones it is about ordinary people who are forced to stand when the land itself remembers future folk horror contemporary anxieties and possible futures analyzes folk horror by looking at its recent popularity in novels and films such as the ritual 2011 the witch 2015 and candyman 2021 countering traditional views of the genre as depictions of the monstrous rural and pagan past trying to consume the present the contributors to this collection posit folk horror as being able to uniquely capture the anxieties of the twenty first century caused by an ongoing pandemic and the divisive populist politics that have arisen around it further this book shows how through its increasing intersections with other genres such as science fiction the weird and eco criticism as seen in films and texts like the zero theorem 2013 the witcher 2007 2021 and annihilation 2018 as well as through its engagement with topics around climate change racism and identity politics folk horror can point to other ways of being in the world and visions of possible futures
