master s thesis from the year 2013 in the subject psychology work business organisation grade 2 3 technical university of munich language english abstract when going for grocery shopping some consumers make up their minds about what to buy and write down shopping lists others just go into the supermarket and do not really think beforehand about the things they need although in both situations individuals engage in different ways of decision making on the purchase of groceries when coming home and putting things into the shelve they positively or negatively assess the things they bought whereas in some situations one gets a positive feeling because e g s he purchased all the products on the shopping list in another situation a consumer might end up being bored because s he just bought the groceries which are perceived as useful and did not listen to his her inner voice calling for more than just the fulfillment of utilitarian needs generally consumers can consciously do their purchases and decide for products after thinking on it or can consider a product s attributes and let their intuition decide in the interest of the consumer the question emerges how the consumer decides at best does a consumer receive greater satisfaction from consciously elaborating about the products s he is facing or is it better not to think consciously when facing product choices this question is differently assessed by different models on decision making whereas some authors ajzen 2011 bandura 1986 1997 deci ryan 1985 payne et al 1993 emphasize consciousness in decision making there is also a large number of proponents of unconscious thought dijksterhuis 2004 dijksterhuis et al 2005 2006a 2006b 2006c levine 1996 bargh 2002 and wilson et al 1993 dijksterhuis and nordgren 2006b p 96 argue for the superiority of unconscious decision making by mentioning that conscious thought is constrained by the low capacity of consciousness which results in sub optimal choices with regard to food products this general superiority of unconscious thought is highly questionable on the one hand consumers constrain themselves in taking into account only specific products which respect certain criteria as e g with diabetics and food products with less sugar content on the other hand food products are also bought because consumers want to confirm their conscience by purchasing e g fair trade products which among other things are associated with a fair payment of farmers most american citizens are quick to criticize federal bureaucracy for its size and inefficiency they assume it has exceeded the intent of our nation s founders yet men like james madison and alexander hamilton knew that good public administrators were essential to good government william richardson here examines the origins legitimacy and limitations of public administration from the perspective of the founders thought he shows that these men especially the authors of the federalist advocated an energetic public administration as an essential component of government and even considered the emergence of a natural aristocracy of virtuous civil servants the founders would see the fault of today s federal bureaucracy argues richardson not as much in its size as in the character of its members richardson relates the founders belief that the nation should strive to produce public servants committed to developing character traits such as wisdom and moderation that would exemplify the highest ideals of the republic and thus ensure its survival they anticipated some self interest on the part of administrators but believed it would be held in check by public opinion and the political process to test the success of the founders ideal richardson examines both the character of administrators and the role of ethics in forming that character he explores the various plans for educating public leaders throughout american history and looks at how attitudes toward public administration have changed in this century from woodrow wilson s scientific ideal to recent proposals to downsize government among other suggestions richardson advocates reforming existing institutions by emphasizing character democracy bureaucracy and character is an exercise in legitimizing public administration offering important insights into the founders thoughts that can be applied to today s debate over government bureaucracy public administration may be problematic by nature observes richardson but it is crucial to our form of government through his analysis we can see that while bureaucracy and democracy have long had an uneasy relationship neither can be effective unless we fully assess the place and purpose of character in the american regime
