explores the interdisciplinary dimensions of black studies

there is a mind war against african consciousness people of african descent are thevictims of a silent psychological onslaught that instils a feeling of guilt within for standing up for the social interests and causes of the black community. African people have to love their own more than they fear being called racist. Furthermore, black people often feel that they must validate their concerns and involvements with black causes by confirming their affiliation and association with multiple other ethnic groups. The black community requires courage if we are to collectively solve our problems as a unit. Kwame Ture said black people need not be apologetic or defensive about controlling their communities. We have seen that this is the one sure way to end racism. This book is dedicated towards undoing much of the psychological damage done to our people.

Winner 2008 PEN Oakland Josephine Miles National Literary Award. Blacks have been vanishing from college campuses in the United States and reappearing in prisons, videos and movies. Cecil Brown tackles this unwitting disappearing act head on, paying special attention to the situation at UC Berkeley and the University of California system generally. Brown contends that educators have ignored the importance of the oral tradition in African American upbringing, an oversight mirrored by the media when these students take exams. Their abilities are not tested further. University officials, administrators, professors and students are ignoring the phenomenon of the disappearing black student in both their admissions and hiring policies with black studies departments shifting the focus from African American and black community interests to black immigrant issues. Says Brown, "The situation is becoming dire. Dude, where's my black studies department?" Offers both a scorching critique and a plan for rethinking and reform of a crucial but largely unacknowledged problem in contemporary society.
