the mixing layer height and the average wind speed within the mixing layer were calculated twice for each day of a 5 year record of upper air observations at 62 national weather service stations in the contiguous United States. The times of day of these calculations are morning and mid afternoon. A rough allowance was made for effects of the urban heat island on the morning mixing heights. The morning and afternoon times coincide approximately with those of maximum and secondary minimum concentrations of slow reacting pollutants in cities. These calculations illustrate the typical large diurnal variation in atmospheric dispersion. Twenty charts present seasonal and annual and morning and afternoon mean mixing heights and wind speeds. A model of some general dispersion features over urban areas is described in which the normalized pollutant concentration averaged over a city is a function of mixing height, wind speed and city size. Distance the wind travels across the city, frequency values of mixing height by wind speed are used with the model to calculate average normalized concentration frequencies for each weather station. Thirty charts present isopleth analyses of seasonal and annual and morning and afternoon normalized pollutant concentrations that were exceeded 10, 25 and 50 percent of the time for specified city sizes. The occurrence of episodes during which upper limits on mixing height and wind speed were not exceeded were determined from the daily morning and afternoon values of these parameters. Isopleths of the total number of episode days for episodes lasting at least 2 days and at least 5 days with various limiting mixing height and wind speed values are presented in 20 charts.

Should fiscal consolidations be front loaded or proceed at a more steady pace and how does this affect growth? We make an attempt to address this question using a three step methodology. First we modify a standard regression of growth on consolidation size to allow speed to affect the multiplier. Second using the narrative dataset of Devries and others (2011) we construct a new sample of multi year consolidation episodes for 17 advanced economies over 1978-2009. Third we develop a novel concept of speed to measure the pace of the consolidation episodes identified in the data. The main empirical finding is that fast episodes have higher multipliers than gradual consolidations. This provides some preliminary support for consolidating at a steady pace, market access and a credible adjustment plan permitting. However as the sample size is small identifying mechanisms and testing robustness is difficult and so our findings should not be interpreted causally.
