this monograph examines the figure of ricardo darin the leading actor that drives argentine cinema s box office success it aims to fill a lacuna both in hispanic and anglophone academia regarding the study of how ricardo darin s rise to stardom took place and what that stardom means for the latin american film industry accordingly it examines whether or not ricardo darin embodies the epitome of the contemporary latin american or hispanic star and importantly whether or not the characteristics of the hollywood star system are actually applicable in the case of argentine cinema where the dividing lines between so called industrial and independent cinemas are very difficult to discern thus whilst taking the study of this key figure from contemporary argentine cinema as its focal point this study will also facilitate an opening up towards broader but equally vital questions that continue to require full examination how are argentine latin american and hispanic stars constructed does the leading actor of contemporary argentine cinema embody a wider social group and historical moment in the region is his performative approach redefining a particular cinematic style
