among the most dynamic aboriginal peoples in western Canada today are the Ojibwa who have played an especially vital role in the development of an aboriginal political voice at both levels of government yet they are relative newcomers to the region occupying the parkland and prairies only since the end of the 18th century this work traces the origins of the western Ojibwa their adaptations to the west and the ways in which they have coped with the many challenges they faced in the first century of their history in that region between 1780 and 1870 the western Ojibwa are descendants of Ojibwa who migrated from around the Great Lakes in the late 18th century this was an era of dramatic change between 1780 and 1870 they survived waves of epidemic disease the rise and decline of the fur trade the depletion of game the founding of non native settlement the loss of tribal lands and the government's assertion of political control over them as a people who emerged adapted and survived in a climate of change the western Ojibwa demonstrate both the effects of historic forces that acted upon native peoples and the spirit determination and adaptive strategies that the native people have used to cope with those forces this study examines the emergence of the western ojibwa within this context seeing both the cultural changes that they chose to make and the continuity within their culture as responses to historical pressures the ojibwa of western canada differs from earlier works by focussing closely on the details of western ojibwa history in the crucial century of their emergence it is based on documents to which pioneering scholars did not have access including fur traders and missionaries journals letters and reminiscences ethnographic and archaeological data and the evidence of material culture and photographic and art images are also examined in this well researched and clearly written history this collection of essays explores the often antagonistic relationship between women and political life in canada while women make up little over half of the total population in canada they are in many ways conspicuous by their absence from the canadian political scene published in english dreams of steady employment in the mining sector led thousands of ukrainian immigrants to northern ontario in the early 1900s as a child stacey zembrzycki listened to her baba s stories about sudbury s small but polarized ukrainian community and what it was like growing up ethnic during the depression according to baba grew out of those stories out of a fledgling historian s desire to capture the experiences of her grandparents generation on paper eighty two interviews conducted by stacey and her grandmother laid the groundwork for this insightful and personal social history of sudbury s ukrainian community the interviews also brought to light the challenges of doing oral history particularly as stacey lost authority to her baba wrestled it back and eventually came to share it by disclosing the hard work that goes into making communities partners in research zembrzycki offers a new paradigm for writing oral history and for studying the politics of memory this important collection makes a compelling argument for the importance of theory in native studies within the field there has been understandable suspicion of theory stemming both from concerns about urgent political issues needing to take precedence over theoretical speculations and from hostility toward theory as an inherently western imperialist epistemology the editors of theorizing native studies take these concerns as the ground for recasting theoretical endeavors as attempts to identify the larger institutional and political structures that enable racism inequities and the displacement of indigenous peoples they emphasize the need for native people to be recognized as legitimate theorists and for the theoretical work happening outside the academy in native activist groups and communities to be acknowledged many of the essays demonstrate how native studies can productively engage with others seeking to dismantle and decolonize the settler state including scholars putting theory to use in critical ethnic studies gender and sexuality studies and postcolonial studies taken together the essays demonstrate how theory can serve as a decolonizing practice contributors christopher bracken glen coulthard mishuana goeman dian million scott morgensen robert nichols vera palmer mark rifkin audra simpson andrea smith teresia teaiwa
