this is a simplified shortened and updated version of the definitive title on management managing which has sold over 70 000 copies from management legend and best selling author henry mintzberg

the trouble with management education says author Henry Mintzberg is that it is business education and leaves a distorted impression of management in managers not MBAs. He offers a new definition of management as a blend of craft, experience, art, insight, and science. Analysis, an education that overemphasizes science encourages a style of managing the author calls calculating. Or if the graduates believe themselves to be artists, the related style heroic. According to the book, neither heroes nor technocrats in positions of influence are useful. What's really needed are balanced, dedicated people who practice a style that can be called engaging. Such people believe their purpose is to leave behind stronger organizations, not just higher share prices. Managers not MBAs explains in detail how to cultivate such managers and how they can transform the business world and ultimately society.

The recent economic crisis was not just caused by a failure of regulation or economic policy; it was a story of the failure of management in a fundamental sense: a deeply flawed approach to management that encouraged bankers to pursue opportunities without regard for their long-term consequences and to put their own interests ahead of those of their employers and their shareholders. And looking more widely, there is a creeping disenchantment with management as a profession. Surveys show that managers generate less respect than lawyers and bankers in the eyes of the general public, and there are few, if any, positive role models for management change. Isn't just for the rank and file anymore, it's coming for you. Instant access to information and global resources have changed the world we live and work in. Julian Birkinshaw shows that 19th-century industrial management won't work in a 21st-century fluid workplace. Read this or prepare to be game-changed by someone who has. Jack Hughes, CEO, TopCoder.
