in the united states the homicide rate in the south is consistently higher than the rate in the north in this brilliantly argued book richard nisbett and dov cohen use this fact as a starting point for an exploration of the underlying reasons for violence according to nisbett and cohen the increased tendency of white southerners to commit certain kinds of violence is not due to socioeconomic class population density the legacy of slavery or the heat of the south it is the result of a culture of honor in which a man s reputation is central to his economic survival working from historical survey social policy and experimental data the authors show that in the south it is more acceptable to be violent in response to an insult in order to protect home and property and to aid in socializing children these values are reflected not only in what southerners say but also in the institutional practices of the south the actions of southerners and their physiological responses to perceived affronts in this lively and intriguing account the authors combine bold theory and careful methodology to reveal a set of central beliefs that can contribute to increased violence more broadly they show us the interaction between culture economics and individual behavior this engaging study will be of interest to students educated lay readers and scholars violence culture and censure consists of a series of original and challenging essays reflecting upon the understanding and moral judgement of violence in the twentieth century it shows that even serious violence is not a simple behavioural fact speaking for itself but a category of thought and practice deeply rooted in history culture and society representing contemporary theoretical developments within sociological criminology this book suggests that the twentieth century has thrown so much philosophical doubt over the idea that violence is unequivocally and always bad behaviour that the issue for many now concerns what violence means the book is thus at the interface between sociology and cultural studies taking a range of examples the authors illustrate the difficulties in defining and explaining violence outside of a theory of the censures which either inspire it or describe it and thus the value of understanding its relation to cultural and historical context they illustrate the uncomfortable proximity between practices of censured violence and the censorious violence of law and order this dialectical theme is evidenced by studies of violence in areas of much contemporary interest including sadomasochism the holocaust latin american dictatorships the punishment of blacks in the usa the content of tarantino films and the philosophy of violence humans of the advanced world are the most violent beings of all times this violence is evident in the conditions of perpetual warfare and the accumulation of the most powerful and destructive arsenal ever known to humankind it is also evident in the devastating impact of advanced world economy and cultural practices which have led to ecological devastation and the current era of mass species extinction one of only six mass extinction events in planetary history and the only one caused by the actions of a single species humans this violence is manifest in our interpersonal relationships and the ways in which we organize ourselves through hierarchical systems that ensure the wealth and privilege of some against the penury and misery of others in this new and highly original book jeff lewis argues that violence is deeply inscribed in human culture thinking and expressive systems media lewis contends that violence is not an inescapable feature of an aggressive human nature rather violence is laced through our desires and dispositions to communalism and expressive interaction from the near extinction of all homo sapiens around 74 000 years ago the invention of culture and media enabled humans to imagine and articulate particular choices and pleasures organized intergroup violence or warfare emerged through the exercise of these choices and their expression through larger and increasingly complex human societies this agitation of amplified desire hierarchical social organization and mediated knowledge systems has created a cultural volition of violent complexity which continues into the present media culture and human violence examines the current conditions of conflict and harm as an expression of our violent complexity there are good reasons to look at violence from new perspectives in its endless manifestations violence is part and parcel of human existence and is very probably a constituting element of human society and yet violent action warfare penalties insults feuding assault murder rape suicide sports remains in all its complexity one of the least understood fields of human social life the book's contributors identify the symbolic and ritualized aspects of violence and suggest ways of reading violence as it occurs in the world whether as violent duelling and age group violence in southern ethiopia bullfighting in iberia cattle rustling in kenya guerrilla and militia wars in colombia or public executions in china these case studies suggest that violence is not a simple universal urge but is contingent and context dependent shaped by social relations of power force and dominance to be the victim of violence is a humiliating and frightening experience but the many ambiguities that occur in the use of violence must be considered to understand why peace seems only to exist as a contrast to the violation of peace examination thesis from the year 2009 in the subject english language and literature studies literature grade 1 5 university of heidelberg language english abstract art has always reflected society fight club examines violence and the roots of frustration that are causing people to reach out for such radical solutions and that's exactly the sort of discussion we should be having about our culture because a culture that doesn't examine its violence is a culture in denial which is much more dangerous this assessment of fight club by edward norton who plays the narrator in the novel's movie adaptation explains the reasoning behind this thesis which examines the basic principles of today's consumer culture its connection to aggression and violence and the way these topics are presented in two contemporary novels bret easton ellis's american psycho and chuck palahniuk's fight club in these books the respective protagonists face similar deadlocks connected to life in the consumerist world of the 1980s and 1990s despite evidently having everything a person could ask for both main characters lives remain unfulfilled leaving them frustrated and dissatisfied as it turns out acts of violence become the only thing that lets them get away from the boredom of their daily routine and gives them a sense of satisfaction
