foundations of Japanese culture and society have been subject to significant changes in recent years this book comprehensively addresses various aspects of family life and dwelling spaces exploring how homes household patterns and kin relations are reacting to contemporary social economic and urban transformations and the degree to which traditional patterns of both houses and households are changing the book contextualises the shift from the hegemonic post war image of standard family life to the nuclear family and to a situation now where Japanese homes are more likely to include unmarried singles childless couples divorcees unmarried adult children and elderly relatives either living alone or in nursing homes it discusses how these new patterns are both reinforcing and challenging typical understandings of Japanese family life in the cities the quarters for the wealthier classes are not so sharply defined as with us though the love for pleasant outlooks and beautiful scenery tends to enhance the value of certain districts and consequently to bring together the wealthier classes in nearly all the cities however you will find the houses of the wealthy in the immediate vicinity of the habitations of the poorest in Tokio one may find streets or narrow pg 6 alleys lined with a continuous row of the cheapest shelters and here dwell the poorest people though squalid and dirty as such places appear to the Japanese they are immaculate in comparison with the unutterable filth and misery of similar quarters in nearly all the great cities of Christendom certainly a rich man in Japan would not as a general thing buy up the land about his house to keep the poorer classes at a distance for the reason that their presence would not be objectionable since poverty in Japan is not associated with the impossible manners of a similar class at home

One of the chief points of difference in a Japanese house as compared with ours lies in the treatment of partitions and outside walls. In our houses these are solid and permanent and when the frame is built the partitions form part of the framework in the Japanese house on the contrary there are two or more sides that have no permanent walls within also there are but few partitions which have similar stability in their stead are slight sliding screens which run in appropriate grooves in the floor and overhead these grooves mark the limit of each room the screens may be opened by sliding them back or they may be entirely removed thus throwing a number of rooms into one great apartment in the same way the whole side of a house may be flung open to sunlight and air for communication between the rooms therefore swinging doors are not necessary as a substitute for windows the outside screens or shōji are covered with white paper allowing the light to be diffused through the house.

This book compares perspectives on gender equality in Norway and Japan focusing on family education media and sexuality and reproduction as seen through a gendered lens. What can we learn from a comparison between two countries that stand in significant contrast to each other with respect to gender equality? Norway and Japan differ in terms of historical cultural and socioeconomic backgrounds; most importantly Japan lags far behind Norway when it comes to the World Economic Forum's gender gap report. Rather than taking a narrow approach that takes as its starting point the assumption that Norway has so much more to offer in terms of gender equality, the authors attempt to show that a comparative perspective of two countries in the west and east can be mutually beneficial to both contexts in the advancement of gender equality. The interdisciplinary team of researchers contributing to this book cover a range of contemporary topics in gender equality including fatherhood and masculinity, teaching and learning in gender studies education, cultural depictions of gender, trans experiences and feminism. This unique collection is suitable for researchers and students of gender studies, sociology, anthropology, Japan studies and European studies.

a house is a site the bounds and focus of a community it is also an artifact a material extension of its occupants lives this book takes the japanese house in both senses as site and as artifact and explores the spaces commodities and conceptions of community associated with it in the modern era as japan modernized the principles that had traditionally related house and family began to break down even where the traditional class markers surrounding the house persisted they became vessels for new meanings as housing was resituated in a new nexus of relations the house as artifact and the artifacts it housed were affected in turn the construction and ornament of houses ceased to be stable indications of their occupants social status the home became a means of personal expression and the act of dwelling was reconceived in terms of consumption amid the breakdown of inherited meanings and the fluidity of modern society not only did the increased diversity of commodities lead to material elaboration of dwellings but home itself became an object of special attention its importance emphasized in writing invoked in politics and articulated in architectural design the aim of this book is to show the features of this culture of the home as it took shape in japan
