we examine the role of consumption externalities in the demand for pharmaceuticals at both the brand level and over a therapeutic class of drugs these effects emerge when use of a drug by others affects its value and or conveys information about efficacy and safety to patients and physicians this can affect that rate of market diffusion for a new entrant and can lead to herd behavior whereby a particular drug can dominate the market despite the availability of close substitutes we use data for h2 antagonist antiulcer drugs to estimate a dynamic demand model and quantify these effects the model has three components an hedonic price equation that measures how the aggregate usage of a drug as well as conventional attributes affect brand valuation equations relating equilibrium market shares to quality adjusted prices and marketing levels and diffusion equations describing the dynamic adjustment process we find that consumption externalities influence both valuations and rates of diffusion but that they operate at the brand and not the therapeutic class level
