exploring the role of museums galleries and curators during the upheaval of the second world war this book challenges the accepted view of a hiatus in museum services during the conflict and its immediate aftermath instead it argues that new thinking in the 1930s was realised in a number of promising initiatives during the war only to fail during the fragmented post war recovery based on new research including interviews with retired museum staff letters diaries museum archives and government records this study reveals a complex picture of both innovation and inertia at the outbreak of war precious objects were stored away and staff numbers reduced but although many museums were closed others successfully campaigned to remain open by providing innovative modern exhibitions and education initiatives they became popular and valued venues for the public after the war however museums returned to their more traditional collections centred approach and failed to negotiate the public funding needed for reconstruction based on this narrower view of their role hence in the longer term the destruction and economic and social consequences of the conflict served to delay aspirations for reconstruction until the 1960s through this lens the history of the museum in the mid twentieth century appears as one shaped by the effects of war but equally determined by the input of curators audiences and the state the museum thus emerges not as an isolated institution concerned only with presenting the past but as a product of the changing conflicts and cultures within society
