from truman to clinton presidents have aggressively tried to expand their control over national government in the process they have vastly enlarged their white house staffs and politicized the federal bureaucracy with thousands of appointees in key administrative positions. Thomas Weko argues that the Presidential Personnel Office (PPO) charged with screening and recommending such appointees both exemplifies and helps explain the enormous growth of presidential power since World War II. Originally conceived as a small advisory group within the White House office, the PPO has grown enormously from a staff of two under Truman to as many as sixty under other presidents and now oversees nearly four thousand appointments per administration. Weko charts the PPO's evolution and influence and shows how central it is to our understanding of modern presidential leadership. Weko's starting point is Terry Moe's rational choice theory that it is the institution of the presidency, not the sitting president, that fosters centralization and politicization within the executive branch, amplifying and extending Moe's theory. Weko persuasively links the PPO's explosive growth to the weakening of political parties, the post-Eisenhower disintegration of policy networks, the growing impact of television news, and the public's increasing readiness to hold the president accountable for policy failures. The PPO's growth clearly has increased presidential control and bureaucratic responsiveness, but Weko argues those results have had unanticipated and unwanted consequences that, among other things, have undermined the integrity and capabilities of administrative agencies. Any improvement in the leadership of the executive branch, he contends, can only emerge from changes in the current institutional arrangement of the presidency itself. Based on exhaustive research in White House files, oral histories, and memoirs, and personal interviews with over 100 White House aides, Weko's study provides a provocative new look at the White House office and the modern presidency.

Like other big city school systems, Chicago's has been repeatedly reformed over the last century, yet its schools have fallen far short of citizens' expectations and left a gap between the performances of white and minority students. Many blame the educational establishment for resisting change; other critics argue that reform occurs too often. Still others claim it comes not often enough. Dorothy Shipp's reappraises the tumultuous history of educational progress in Chicago, revealing that the persistent lack of improvement is due not to the extent but rather the type of reform. Throughout the twentieth century, managerial reorganizations initiated by the business community repeatedly altered the governance structure of schools, as well as the relationships of teachers to children and parents, but brought little improvement. While other more promising reform models were either resisted or crowded out, Shipp chronicles how Chicago's corporate actors led, abetted, or restrained nearly every attempt to transform the city's school system. Then she asks whether schools might be better reformed by others to show why city schools have failed urban children so badly. She traces Chicago's reform history over four political eras, revealing how corporate power was instrumental in designing and revamping the system. Her narrative encompasses the formative era of 1880-1930, when teachers' unions moderated business plans; previously unexplored business activism from 1930 to 1980, when civil rights dominated school reform; and the decentralization of the 1980s. She also covers the uneasy cooperation among business associations in the 1990s to install the mayor as head of the school system, a governing regime now challenged by privatization advocates. Business people may be too wedded to a stunted view of educators to forge a productive partnership for change. Unionized teachers bridle at the second-class status accorded them by managers if reform is to reach deeply into classrooms shipps concludes it might well require a new coalition of teachers unions and parents to create a fresh agenda that supersedes corporate interests this study clearly shows that in chicago as elsewhere urban schooling is intertwined with politics and power by reviewing more than a century of corporate efforts to make education work shipps makes a strong case that it s high time to look elsewhere perhaps to educators themselves for new leadership during much of the cold war america s first line of defense was in outer space a network of secret satellites that could provide instant warning of an enemy missile launch the presence of these infrared sensors orbiting 22 000 miles above the earth discouraged a soviet first strike and stabilized international relations between the superpowers and they now play a crucial role in monitoring the missile programs of china india and other emerging nuclear powers jeffrey richelson has written the first comprehensive history of this vital program tracing its evolution from the late 1950s to the present he puts defense support program operations in the context of world events from russian missile programs to the gulf war and explains how dsp s infrared sensors are used to detect meteorites monitor forest fires and even gather industrial intelligence by seeing the lights of steel mills
