in premodern europe families played a significant role in commissioning artworks as well as in choosing what iconography was used the nine essays in this volume highlight the often overlooked contributions of matriarchs actual or iconographic to this process they look at mothers wives mistresses sisters and nuns who served as patrons models of inspiration and even as artists themselves while most maternal imagery was positive occasionally it could reveal motherly instincts that had gone awry as in the case of the wild woman of northern european folklore who abducted children whether manifesting as portrayals of charity labour sacrifice piety compassion or grief the imagery evoked by spiritual and maternal connections among kinsfolk played an essential role in european iconography and creative output based upon investigations in archives and manuscripts along with written and visual sources the essays in this volume thus make a vital contribution to the growing body of research on the importance of family matters in artistic development from the late seventeenth through the mid eighteenth centuries large scale italian frescoes soared in popularity as nobles in the german principalities of the holy roman empire constructed new palaces at an unprecedented rate they competed with one another to produce lavish decorative schemes that expressed their claim to princely power and political authority whereas previous art historians have primarily focused on iconographic and stylistic issues and generally treated these programs as individual commissions of regional courts this book places the works of art within their broad cultural and historical contexts during the enlightenment this monograph explains how rulers gradually shifted from emphasizing military heroism to stressing their cultivation of the arts and sciences and addresses how expressing membership in a specifically european civilization emerged as an integral visual theme and a key ambition of the german nobility
