excerpt from the effect of war upon art and literature a lecture delivered at the university of manchester february 28 1916 first of all it may be as well to be clear about the terms we are using art and literature then i regard for the purposes of this lecture as different manifestations of what is at root the same creative spirit the same impulse to aesthetic expression in dealing with literature i shall almost entirely confine myself to the poet not because the writer of prose shows qualities in any sense contradictory to those of the poet but because those qualities in the poet are more fused and more concentrated more quintessential and will therefore better illustrate the points that i wish to make as to art i hardly think it necessary to attempt a definition for it can be defined in exactly as many ways as there are subjects with which it is for the moment being likened or contrasted i will only say that when i use the word art to night i shall take it quite generally to include the activities of the painter the sculptor and the musician about the publisher forgotten books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books find more at forgottenbooks com this book is a reproduction of an important historical work forgotten books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy in rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition we do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
