originally published in 1983 the urban and regional transformation of britain analyses economic and social changes recorded across the cities and regions of britain since the barlow report the collection analyses the whole country at a more detailed scale than the ten standard regions for which most official statistics are produced although there are important differences between the major regions of britain many of the recent processes of change appear to have operated at a local level within rather than between regions the essays in this volume bring together change at the regional and local labour market scales and provides a comprehensive statement of urban and regional change seeking to highlight the new spatial priorities of the 1980s a comprehensive treatment of regional transformation offering insights from different theoretical perspectives and generating a range of policy relevant ideas providing a new picture of the socio economic map of central europe after several years of transformation and focusing in particular on poland this book gives an account of the major problems of regional restructuring the author identifies the opportunities and problems faced by particular regions by relating the polish experience to the experience of other central european countries this in turn provides a general picture of spatial patterns of transformation in this specific part of europe and will interest those concerned with the transformation of eastern europe the regional economics of technological transformations provides a comprehensive overview of 4 0 technological transformations in europe and their socio economic impact with a particular emphasis on the regional dimension of the phenomena the authors employ extensive original data and robust quantitative methods to analyse technological change in all regions of the 27 eu countries plus the uk and shed light on this trend for europe and beyond structured in four parts the book first looks at conceptual definitions empirical measurements and expected impacts on both the economic performance gdp and productivity growth and the labour market and then moves on to analyse where 4 0 technological transformation actually takes place in europe and the reasons for this next it offers original empirical evidence on the impacts of the different transformations and of their intertwined effects on both the economy and the society finally the book explores the policy implications of this technological transformation this book will be valuable reading for advanced students researchers and policymakers working across regional economics industrial economics and innovation policy it will be of primary interest to regional scientists interested in the field who may enjoy the conceptual and empirical solutions to the study of a very complex timely and still largely unexplored theme sociologists engineers and political economists can benefit from the book s analysis noting the urgency of the development of new ethical rules governing the new digital and labour markets finally the book may appeal to policymakers interested in opportunities to increase regional competitiveness and sustainability goals through the advent of 4 0 technologies regions have emerged as an important spatial scale through which to understand processes of economic development lundvall and borri s 1997 asheim and isaksen 2002 boschma 2005 2015 boschma et al 2017 isaksen and trippel 2016 neffke et al 2011 this regional turn however has sought to provide answers to several important questions about how the process of economic development unfolds differently across regions and more directly how and why it is that regions transform differently pike rod r guez pose and tomaney 2007 trippel et al 2020 debates about how to understand regional transformation and the dimensions which contribute to the differing experience of regions are ongoing with recent experiments in the realm of policy providing new sources of data and evidence to uncover important aspects of how regional transformation unfolds martin 2010 boschma et al 2017 of particular concern to this thesis is how processes of regional transformation lead to economic growth the relationship between the more quantitative focus on growth versus the more qualitative focus on development is discussed in greater detail in the work of feldman et al 2015 and further discussed in the more recent work of feldman and storper 2018 who highlight the frequency with which the terms of growth and development are often used interchangeably feldman and storper 2018 further highlight that the terms frequently correlate in practice such as in the example of per capita income indicating growth and the human development index indicating development which show strong correlation in the range of 0 95 for example furthermore the authors highlight that the precise direction of causation between growth and development remains unclear for example does growth in income drive investment in education or does educational investment produce income growth here then economic growth tends to be a focus of macroeconomists who rely on the use of quantifiable metrics such as gross national product as opposed to economic development which instead is typically concerned with infrastructure public health and education for example what this current thesis is focused on is understanding how economic growth can be achieved through processes of regional transformation and the ways in which knowledge dynamics in a region can lead to innovation which in turn can lead to productivity improvements which in turn stimulate regional economic growth and how it is that such changes in a region's economy are stimulated through such processes of regional transformation a core focus of this current research is on the structural changes which can take place in a regional economy by for example focusing on the changes in sectoral and technological composition in a given region's economy in order to understand this regional economic growth regional transformation in this sense can be considered a process whereby the economic activities or portfolios of economic activities in a region transform or change over time the transformation process then can be seen as leading to regional economic growth with the exact contributory factors of such an outcome being the subject of considerable scholarly attention Glaeser et al 1992 Frenken van Oort and Verburg 2007 Beaudry and Schiffauerova 2009 Isaksen and Trippl 2016 Oinas Trippl and Højss 2018 the transformation then of regional economies varies markedly with the outcomes of such processes of change remaining a phenomenon which plagues policymakers and scholars alike Frenken van Oort and Verburg 2007 Bellini Lazzeri and Rovai 2020 De Propriis and Bailey 2021 however recent work has begun to provide greater clarity on the factors which go into the process of regional transformation with the knowledge bases which exist in regions alongside the respective role of policy being an area of considerable promise in explaining the structural changes which produce broader regional transformation processes Frenken van Oort and Verburg 2007 Asheim Moodysson and Edtling 2011 Borrós 2011 Asheim 2019 Trippl et al 2020 this volume deals with the complex issues raised by rapid transitions in space that are in part the result of technological developments of previous decades it focuses on the impacts on regional development technological innovation and the flows and mobility of ideas knowledge people and firms the existence and persistence of regional disparities between European regions require context tailored policies to promote structural change this book explores the congruence between place based development and regional competitiveness in the EU context drawing on a range of social science disciplines this book unpicks the complexity of regional transformation processes aiming to enhance the applicability and transferability of theoretical approaches to innovation and place based regional development in diverse European territorial settings the contributors have a particular focus on less favoured regions and on the application of smart specialisation a strategic approach to innovation based regional development to the issues at hand the book comes at a critical moment meeting the growing demand of academics practitioners and policymakers with an interest in promoting regional economic growth and well being
