In pediatrics, occupational therapy practitioners are concerned most with positively impacting the extent to which children and their families are able to successfully and meaningfully go about their daily lives, whether it be playing, learning, working, caring for oneself or others, or socializing. Clinical decisions made throughout the evaluation process ultimately shape what and how occupational therapy practitioners deliver interventions, perhaps making the evaluation process the most important and interesting part of the service delivery process. It is the context where we first come to know and appreciate our clients, their specific situations, and discover what it is that we, as occupational therapy practitioners, can do to be of most help provided by publisher.

The philosophy of normalization and promotion of the plight of children and adults with mental handicaps has drawn more public attention in recent years. Governments in a number of countries have embarked upon policies involving the closure of institutions, movement of people with mental handicaps back into the community, and development of community-oriented programmes. Although their reasons for this may be economically rather than ideologically motivated, occupational therapists have moved into the community along with other health professionals in order to set up community services for people with mental handicaps. My own experience of working in a multidisciplinary team in central London for 2½ years, helping adults with mental handicaps to move out of an institution, has been a source of motivation to write this book. The amount of written material available on the occupational therapy approach to resettlement and deinstitutionalization is limited in comparison with the massive amount of information written by and for other practitioners. Additionally, the number of texts written by and for occupational therapists with this client group are few despite excellent support from OT colleagues. I experienced considerable frustration trying to define and perform my role, not helped by a shortage of texts to draw on.
