it was in 2003 that the eu commission directorate general for education and culture commissioned a study on young people's lifestyles and sedentariness and the role of sport in the context of education and as a means of restoring the balance the purpose of this study was to compile an intercultural comparative analysis of adolescents' lifestyles within the EU. This analysis was based on international and national studies from the areas of epidemiology, cardiology, paediatrics, physiology, nutrition, psychology, sociology and sport sciences dealing with physical activity, fitness and motor abilities.

The potential of terrorist attacks against agricultural targets (agroterrorism) is increasingly recognised as a national security threat, especially after the events of September 11, 2001. Agroterrorism is a subset of bioterrorism and is defined as the deliberate introduction of an animal or plant disease with the goal of generating fear, causing economic losses and/or undermining stability. Attacks against agriculture are not new and have been conducted or considered by both nation states and substate organisations throughout history. The results of an agroterrorist attack may include major economic crises in the agricultural and food industries, loss of confidence in government and possibly human casualties. Humans could be at risk in terms of food safety or public health, especially if the chosen disease is transmissible to humans (zoonotic). Public opinion may be particularly sensitive to a deliberate outbreak of disease affecting the food supply. Public confidence in government could be eroded if authorities appear unable to prevent such an attack or to protect the population's food supply. Agriculture has several characteristics that pose unique problems for managing the threat: agricultural production is geographically dispersed in unsecured environments; livestock are frequently concentrated in confined locations and then transported and commingled with other herds; pest and disease outbreaks can quickly halt economically important exports; many veterinarians lack experience with foreign animal diseases that are resilient and endemic in foreign countries; agriculture and food production generally have received less attention in counterterrorism and homeland security efforts, but more recently agriculture has garnered more attention in the expanding field of terrorism studies; laboratory and response systems are being upgraded to address the reality of agroterrorism. This new book examines this threat and the preparations underway for countering it.
