this book provides a state of the art approach to participatory planning and generates innovative thought in planning theory and knowledge study the book introduces a new conceptual framework for participatory planning one which redefines concepts that have been taken for granted for too long those of public participation and local knowledge it draws on the rich repertoire of public participation practices that have developed globally over the last 50 years and investigates the following questions which participatory practices most effectively capture residents genuine spatial needs perceptions and desires and how can these be incorporated into actual plans the book is based on an empirical comparative examination of the effectiveness of various participatory processes and proposes practical solutions for public participation through two new instruments the practices evaluation tool and the participatory methods ladder these instruments calibrate participation methods according to certain criteria in order to improve their ability to extract local knowledge and incorporate it into planning deliverables these new instruments correspond to and elaborate on arnstein s ladder the 1969 theoretical landmark for participatory planning both academics and practitioners in the area of urban and regional planning will find this book to be an invaluable resource given the way it develops both theoretical and practical cutting edge outcomes digital participatory planning outlines developments in the field of digital planning and designs and trials a range of technologies from the use of apps and digital gaming through to social media to examine how accessible and effective these new methods are it critically discusses urban planning democracy and computing technology literature and sets out case studies on design and deployment it assesses whether digital technology offers an opportunity for the public to engage with urban change to enhance public understanding and the quality of citizen participation and to improve the proactive possibilities of urban planning more generally the authors present an exciting alternative story of citizen engagement in urban planning through the reimagination of participation that will be of interest to students researchers and professionals engaged with a digital future for people and planning mirroring the complexities of cities and neighborhoods this volume makes a conscious departure from consensus oriented public participation to conflict resolving public participation in india planning practice generally involves citizens at different stages of plan making with a clear purpose of securing a consensus aimed at legitimizing the policy content of a development plan this book contests and challenges this consensus oriented view of citizen participation in planning arguing against the assertion that cities can be represented by a single public interest for which consensus is sought by planners and policy makers as such it replaces consensus centered rational planning models with foucauldian and lacanian models of planning to show that planning is riddled with a variety of spatial conflicts most of which are resolvable the book does not downplay differences of class and social and cultural identities of various kinds built on arbitrarily assumed public interest created erroneously by further assuming that the professionally trained planner is unbiased it moves from theory to practice through case studies which widens and deepens opportunities for public participation as new arenas beyond the processes of preparation of development plans are highlighted the book also argues that spaces of public participation in planning are shrinking for example city development plans promoted under the erstwhile jnum programme and several other neoliberal policy regime initiatives have reduced the quality as well as the extent of participatory practices in planning the end result of this is that legally mandated participatory spaces are being used by powerful interests to pursue the neoliberal agenda the volume is divided into three main parts the first part deals with the theory and history of public participation and governance in planning in india and the second presents real life case studies related to planning at a regional level in order to describe and empirically explore some of the theoretical arguments made in the first the third section provides analyses of selected case studies at a local level an introduction and conclusions along with insights for the future provide a coherent envelope to the book participatory rural planning presents the argument that citizen participation in planning affairs transcends a rights based legitimacy and an all too frequent perception of being mere consultation rather it is part of a social learning process that can enhance the prospects for successful implementation provide opportunity for reflection and create a mutuality of respect between different stakeholders in the planning arena accordingly michael murray signposts what can work well and what should work differently in regard to participatory planning by taking rural ireland as the empirical laboratory and exploring the irish experience at different spatial scales from the village through to the locality the sub regional and the regional levels participatory planning is very sought after concept in the domain of planning in current practices there are many practices in delhi which is seen as a good example of participatory planning and the concerns arises when we want to replicate in other cities and towns then it becomes imperative to look in detail the process and their allied pros and cons so that a more effective model can be adapted and adopted for implementation for delhi also we are in the process of preparation of local area plan an initiative of municipal corporation of delhi to realize the provisions of master plan for a planned development taking into account the existing ground realities the author thinks that his research work will be of some help in devising more efficient mechanism for public participation and demand responsive planning by the local body of the national capital this book examines the challenges in delivering a participatory planning agenda in the face of an increasingly neoliberalised planning system and charts the experience of planning aid england in an age of austerity government spending cuts privatisation and rising inequalities the need to support and include the most vulnerable in society is more acute than ever however forms of advocacy planning the progressive concept championed for this purpose since the 1960s is under threat from neoliberalisation rather than abandoning advocacy the book asserts that only through sustained critical engagement will issues of exclusion be positively tackled and addressed the authors propose neo advocacy planning as the critical lens through which to effect positive change this they argue will need to draw on a co production model maintained through a well resourced special purpose organisation set up to mobilise and resource planning intermediaries whose role it is to activate support and educate those without the resources to secure such advocacy themselves
