Shivaji A Framework for Efficient Data Distribution in Peer-to-peer Networks Shalya-Kaushalya – B.N. Purandare Atmakatha Vaibhav Purandare Darshan Purandare Aniket Joshi

this biography corrects many falsities and myths and it is the only book you need to read about one of india s greatest heroes peer to peer p2p models are based on user altruism wherein a user shares its content with other users in the pool and it also has an interest in the content of the other nodes most p2p systems in their current form are not fair in terms of the content served by a peer and the service obtained from swarm most systems suffer from free rider s problem where many high uplink capacity peers contribute much more than they should while many others get a free ride for downloading the content this leaves high capacity nodes with very little or no motivation to contribute many times such resourceful nodes exit the swarm or don t even participate the whole scenario is unfavorable and disappointing for p2p networks in general where participation is a must and a very important feature as the number of users increases in the swarm the swarm becomes robust and scalable other important issues in the present day p2p system are below optimal quality of service qos in terms of download time end to end latency and jitter rate uplink utilization excessive cross isp traffic security and cheating threats etc these current day problems in p2p networks serve as a motivation for present work to this end we present an efficient data distribution framework in peer to peer p2p networks for media streaming and file sharing domain the experiments with our model an alliance based peering scheme for media streaming show that such a scheme distributes data to the swarm members in a near optimal way alliances are small groups of nodes that share data and other vital information for symbiotic association we show that alliance formation is a loosely coupled and an effective way to organize the peers and our model maps to a small world network which form efficient overlay structures and are robust to network perturbations such as churn we present a comparative simulation based study of our model with coolstreaming donet a popular model and present a quantitative performance evaluation simulation results show that our model scales well under varying workloads and conditions delivers near optimal levels of qos reduces cross isp traffic considerably and for most cases performs at par or even better than cool streaming donet in the next phase of our work we focussed on bittorrent p2p model as it the most widely used file sharing protocol many studies in academia and industry have shown that though bittorrent scales very well but is far from optimal in terms of fairness to end users download time and uplink utilization furthermore random peering and data distribution in such model lead to suboptimal performance lately new breed of bittorrent clients like bittyrant have shown successful strategic attacks against bittorrent strategic peers configure the bittorrent client software such that for very less or no contribution they can obtain good download speeds such strategic nodes exploit the altruism in the swarm and consume resources at the expense of other honest nodes and create an unfair swarm more unfairness is generated in the swarm with the presence of heterogeneous bandwidth nodes we investigate and propose a new token based anti strategic policy that could be used in bittorrent to minimize the free riding by strategic clients we also proposed other policies against strategic attacks that include using a smart tracker that denies the request of strategic clients for peer list multiple times and black listing the non behaving nodes that do not follow the protocol policies these policies help to stop the strategic behavior of peers to a large extent and improve overall system performance we also quantify and validate the benefits of using bandwidth peer matching policy our simulations results show that with the above proposed changes uplink utilization and mean download time in bittorrent network improves considerably it leaves strategic clients with little or no incentive to behave greedily this reduces free riding and creates fairer swarm with very little computational overhead finally we show that our model is self healing model where user behavior changes from selfish to altruistic in the presence of the aforementioned policies
