this book is an exploration of what it takes for an event to count as an action i first became interested in this topic nearly a decade ago while working on a different topic i kept coming across philosophers making claims about the nature of action that seemed false or at least dubious to me as a consequence i turned to the philosophy of action directly to get to the heart of the matter i have wrestled with this territory ever since i hope that with this book i have finally earned the intuitions that put me at odds with the philosophers i was originally reading this book develops ideas in part two of my doctoral dissertation which i wrote at

it is well over a decade since john fischer and mark ravizza and before them jay wallace and daniel dennett defended responsibility from the threat of determinism but defending responsibility from determinism is a potentially endless and largely negative enterprise it can go on for as long as dissenting voices remain and although such work strengthens the theoretical foundations of these theories it won t necessarily build anything on top of those foundations nor will it move these theories into new territory or explain how to apply them to practical contexts to this end the papers in this volume address these more positive challenges by exploring how compatibilist responsibility theory can be extended and or applied in a range of practical contexts for instance how is the narrow philosophical concept of responsibility that was defended from the threat of determinism related to the plural notions of responsibility present in everyday discourse and how might this more fine grained understanding of responsibility open up new vistas and challenges for compatibilist theory what light might compatibilism shed and what light might be shed upon it by political debates about access to public welfare in the context of responsibility for one s own health and by legal debates about the impact of self intoxication on responsibility does compatibilist theory which was originally designed to cater for analysis of individual actions scale to scenarios that involve group action and collective responsibility e g for harms due to human induced climate change this book s chapters deal with a range of theoretical problems discussed in classic compatibilist literature e g the relationship between responsibility and capacity the role of historical tracing in discounting the exculpatory value of incapacities and the justifiability of retributive punishment but instead of motivating their discussions by focusing on the alleged threat that determinism poses to responsibility these chapters authors have animated their discussions by tackling important practical problems which crop up in contemporary debates about responsibility the book reviews philosophical approaches of justice charts that rise and fall of equity theory in psychology and describes the conceptual turmoil that has resulted since its decline however in the second part of the book it is argued that by combining the results of modern psychological research into justice and sociobiology with our knowledge of the ancient philosophical traditions of justice and tracing some of the historical development of these traditions it may be possible to define a fundamental unifying core principle of justice and to gain a unique insight into the roots of the problems that now confront theorists and researchers in the area this volume is a conceptual analysis of issues in group responsibility an attempt is made to identify factors which affect the degree to which individuals sharing responsibility for what happens bear responsibility for it as well as factors which are erroneously judged to have such an effect an examination of these issues leads to extended discussions of acting or failing to act in the company of others the sequence in which the agents in a group perform acts and group risk taking it is argued that the failure to understand such issues has contributed to a widespread uncertainty in contemporary society as to the moral implications of participating in group actions
