this first extensive study of spinoza s philosophy of mind concentrates on two problems crucial to the philosopher s thoughts on the matter the requirements for having a thought about a particular object and the problem of the mind s relation to the body della rocca contends that spinoza s positions are systematically connected with each other and with a principle at the heart of his metaphysical system his denial of causal or explanatory relations between the mental and the physical in this way della rocca s exploration of these

this title was first published in 2002 this collection of essays aims to present a wide range of interpretations of central themes in spinoza s philosophy philosophical interpretations of spinoza divide into three general categories the first sets spinoza within what is taken to be his historical context special emphasis is laid here on aspects of his teaching that seem to bear the influence of spinoza s own education and self education either through concepts assimilated into his own thinking or those he undertook to refute and displace a second interpretative approach uses analytical tools in an attempt to reconstruct spinozistic issues and theories critically finally there are philosophers who explore spinoza s texts in their own terms attempting to present a coherent picture of one or more aspects of spinoza s teaching given the broad span of issues with which spinoza deals the latter is often the most difficult track to follow the 25 articles in this collection exemplify these three attitudes to spinoza interpretation though most avail themselves of more than one in making the selection the editors preferred studies that treat their subject as a viable enduring philosophical issue whether the writer accepts spinoza's presentation or highlights his difficulties on each issue the articles critically analyze the texts rather than simply portraying the spinozistic ideas they express they are often portrayed as outsiders ethnic minorities the poor the disabled and so many others all living on the margins of mainstream society countless previous studies have focused on their pain and powerlessness but that has done little more than sustain our preconceptions of marginalized groups most accounts of marginalization approach the subject from a distance and tend to overemphasize the victimization of outsiders taking a more intimate approach this book reveals the personal moral and social implications of marginalization by drawing upon the actual experiences of such individuals multidisciplinary and multicultural identity on the margin addresses marginalization at a variety of social levels and within many different social phenomena going beyond familiar cases dealing with race ethnicity and gender to examine such outsiders as renegade children conservative christians and the physically and mentally disabled and because women are especially subject to the effects of marginalization feminist concerns and the marginalization of sexual practices provide a common denominator for many of the essays from problems posed by complimentary racism to the status of gays in tony blair's england from the struggle of native americans to preserve their identities to the singular problems of single mothers identity on the margin takes in a broad spectrum of cases to provide theoretical analysis and ethical criticism of the mechanisms of identity formation at the edges of society in all of the cases the authors demonstrate the need for theory that initiates social change by considering the ethical implications of marginalization and criticizing its harmful effects bringing together accounts of marginalization from many different disciplines and perspectives this collection addresses a broad audience in the humanities and social sciences it offers a basis for enhancing our understanding of this process and for working toward meaningful social change much of the organizational behaviour literature examines the way actors behave in organizations and much of architectural spatial design literature discusses aesthetics design and construction of buildings organizational behaviour literature tends to emphasize the relationships between members of an organization and how these relationships affect management of change architectural spatial design literature tends to emphasize the project management aspect of managing physical change to buildings but very little is known about how changes to organisational spatial design are perceived or understood by organizational actors these bodies of literature have remained apart which is surprising considering that buildings are designed for people this thesis begins to examine the overlapping area between organizational behaviour and spatial design by addressing why how and with what effect a strategic change process within three case studies was interpreted by the organizational actors interpreting symbolic physical artefacts in their built environment these three organizations were of the same industry type and under the same management structure but with distinctly different management of change processes the participants who were organizational actors interpreted physical symbolic artefacts which they identified as being central to 24 change incidents the research techniques used to understand these interpretations and their role in identity formation within a change process were interviews with the participants over four phases participant observation and photographic ethnography over a 36 month period this gave the opportunity for an in depth ethnographic experience in the context of place and over time which elicited micro level details on the processes involved in interpretation and consequent identity formation processes the analysed research data was then used to create a series of typologies and models to demonstrate how and to what extent each dimension of the physical symbolic artefact is used in the interpretation process and how interpretation differs in changing contexts and over time the models also demonstrates how and through which processes we interpret physical artefacts using their aesthetic instrumental and symbolic dimensions and how these interpretations are used to affirm influence and or create our workplace identities the main factors affecting interpretation and identity formation within the case studies were found to be issues of respect legitimisation power and status and these were accentuated by the different management of change processes used in the three case studies overall the research shows that we interpret physical symbolic artefacts in the organizational built environment using different dimensions of the artefact and these interpretations are used to inform and alter our self group organizational or workplace identities my research confirmed rafaeli vilnai yavetz 2004 findings that participants interpreted artefacts through the aesthetic instrumental and symbolic dimensions my research extended these findings by establishing how and to what extent the various dimensions are used and that the resulting interpretation is used to form or influence various aspects of organizational identity therefore linking the findings to hatch schultz s 2002 process model of organizational identity hatch schultz 2002 provided a useful framework for differentiating the concepts of organizational culture identity and image and how they are interlinked and mentioned the role of physical symbolic artefacts in that process specifically stating that corporate architecture is used to express identity and also that by building corporate facilities identity is projected to others however they did not research the precise role extent and context of physical symbolic artefacts i found that we use symbolic physical artefacts within all four of the processes of identity formation proposed by hatch schultz 2002 namely mirroring reflecting expressing and impressing and that as a consequence the role the built environment plays in identity formation is more significant than previously envisaged understanding the use of physical symbolic artefacts in the formation of workplace identity links the two fields of identity and symbols this thesis develops the constructs of workplace identity and image and uses them to link ideas for examining changing organizational relationships and the impact of the organizational built environment on its occupants and stakeholders the literature has previously suggested a limited use of physical symbolic artefacts within formation of identity but my research suggests that physical symbolic artefacts in the built environment are used more extensively than previously suggested therefore taking a step further towards explaining the roles of artefacts in the identity process
