once one of the world's largest staple food producers angola is now known as a major oil exporter the second largest producer in sub saharan africa angola is also the world's fourth largest producer of rough diamonds in terms of value with the potential to become one of the leading global diamond producers in addition to oil and diamonds the country is well endowed with agricultural resources which remain mostly untapped however despite the country's significant natural wealth a prolonged civil war the rapid development of the oil sector and the policies pursued after independence in 1975 have left the angolan economy in a unique situation characterized by very uneven indicators of development the angolan economy is now experiencing massive oil windfall gains that are expected to last throughout the next decade since oil rents are to a large part concentrated in the public sector the question of how the oil revenue should be spent and distributed across present and future generations becomes key to any economic development strategy this study identifies six core areas where a strategic approach for the development of a broad based growth strategy is required i the incomplete transition to a market economy ii macroeconomic management iii governance and transparency in the management of the mineral wealth iv the business environment v agriculture and vi public service delivery to the poor in many countries the state owns or manages forests in the national interests of economic development ecosystem service provision or biodiversity conservation a national approach to reducing deforestation and forest degradation and the enhancement of forest carbon stocks redd will thus most likely involve governmental entities at different governance levels from central to local sub national governments that implement redd activities will generate carbon ecosystem services and potentially other co benefits such as biodiversity conservation and in the process incur implementation and opportunity costs for these actions this occasional paper analyses the literature on ecological fiscal transfers efts with a focus on experiences in brazil and portugal to draw lessons for how policy instruments for intergovernmental transfers can be designed in a national redd benefit sharing system efts can be an effective policy instrument for improving revenue adequacy and fiscal equalization across a country they facilitate financial allocations based on a sub national government's environmental performance and could also partly compensate the costs of redd implementation we find that intergovernmental efts targeting sub national public actors can be an important element of policy mix for redd benefit sharing particularly in a decentralized governance system as decisions on forest and land use are being made at sub national levels given the increasing focus and interest on jurisdictional REDD efforts may have a role in filling the shortfall of revenues for REDD readiness and for implementing enabling actions related to forest governance if efforts are to have efficient and equitable outcomes however they will require strong information sharing and transparency systems on environmental indicators and performance and the disbursement and spending of effort funds across all levels
