This volume of interdisciplinary essays focuses on the contested character of the production of knowledge itself in every chapter. Case studies and ethnographic materials drawn from such regions as South Africa, Mozambique, Zimbabwe, the Malagasy Republic, Angola, Ghana, and Senegal demonstrate the application of theory to concrete situations.

In analyzing the obstacles to democratization in post-independence Africa, Mahmood Mamdani offers a bold, insightful account of colonialism's legacy. A bifurcated power that mediated racial domination through tribally organized local authorities reproducing racial identity in citizens and ethnic identity in subjects, many writers have understood colonial rule as either direct French or indirect British. With a third variant, apartheid as exceptional, this benign terminology, Mamdani shows, masks the fact that these were actually variants of a despotism. While direct rule denied rights to subjects on racial grounds, indirect rule incorporated them into a customary mode of rule with state-appointed native authorities defining custom by tapping authoritarian possibilities in culture and by giving culture an authoritarian bent. Indirect rule decentralized despotism set the pace for Africa. The French followed suit by changing from direct to indirect administration while apartheid emerged relatively later. Apartheid, Mamdani shows, was actually the generic form of the colonial state in Africa. Through case studies of rural Uganda and urban South Africa, resistance movements we learn how these institutional features fragment resistance and how states tend to play off reform in one sector against repression in the other. The result is a groundbreaking reassessment of colonial rule in Africa and its enduring aftereffects. Reforming a power that institutionally enforces tension between town and country and between ethnicities is the key challenge for anyone interested in democratic reform in Africa.

The Making of Contemporary Africa examines the complex events in sub-Saharan Africa since the eighteenth century in the light of scholarly appraisal. In recent years the themes of class and labour are highlighted. It enables the reader to come to grips with contemporary problems instead of falling into the easy trap of looking on independence as a happy ending.

Although developing countries far outnumber fully industrialized states, they are often neglected in the study of international relations, especially with respect to the development of foreign policy theory. International Relations in Contemporary Africa attempts to fill this void in the literature on comparative international relations while at the same time providing a detailed analysis of the economic development and integration of West African countries. Michael A. Andu specifically focuses on the members of the economic community of west african states ecowas and their policies which encourage coordination on issues ranging from science and technology to diplomacy and mutual defense tracing the diplomatic history of west africa from independence to the present he assesses the various dimensions of cooperation among the smaller and less developed states of west africa while revealing the precarious nature of the economy and security in the region both detailed and comprehensive international relations in contemporary africa represents a significant contribution to african studies that appeal to those with an interest in the foreign policy of smaller states

this book explains how and why cities on the african continent have grown at such a rapid pace how municipal authorities have tried to cope with this massive influx of people and how long time urban residents and newcomers interact negotiate and struggle over access to limited resources the history of religions in contemporary africa is not just history it is in fact political history this theme of the religious metaphor in the engagement of power relations is impressively illuminated in this thoroughly researched collection of essays on religion state and society in contemporary africa nowadays the environment looms large in the analysis of conflict in developing societies and the precise role it plays is the subject of an ongoing debate the debate has moved on from the earlier but still popular notions of power struggles class struggles and ethnic conflicts to a perception of conflict as the product of intense group competition for resources where the state controls the distribution of resources itself inevitably becomes party to conflicts whose bone of contention is access to state power as the most efficient means of gaining access to resources the resources in question are social health education transportation communication recreation etc and material land water housing jobs contracts licenses permits etc in parts of the world and especially in africa diminishing resources and authoritarian state rule exacerbate group competition leading to political confrontation this is the line i have followed in analysing conflict in the book of africa markakis 1987 1998 mohamed salih s first contribution in this volume is to move the debate a step beyond this line which can be criticized as unduly materialist he does it by bringing culture into the realm of resources not only as a resource in itself but also as the agency that assigns natural resources their value culture thus becomes a contextual element in conflict over resources whose value is culturally determined
