- 1. Lovell Health House (1929) One of Neutra's earliest and most influential works, the Lovell Health House in Los Angeles is celebrated as a pioneering example of modernist residential architecture focused on health and wellness. Its steel frame, extensive glass walls, and open plan layout set new standards for healthy living environments. Key features:
 - Steel construction for durability and flexibility
 - Large, operable windows for ventilation
 - Connection to outdoor spaces and gardens
 - Emphasis on sunlight and fresh air
- 2. Kaufmann Desert House (1946) Located in Palm Springs, this residence exemplifies Neutra's mastery in desert modernism. Its low-slung profile, expansive glass walls, and integration with the surrounding landscape create a seamless indoor-outdoor living experience. Highlights include:
 - Use of natural materials blending with desert surroundings
 - Flat roofs and cantilevered terraces
 - Emphasis on privacy while maintaining openness
 - Strategic window placement for thermal comfort
- 3. VDL Research House (1950) The VDL Research House in Los Angeles served as Neutra's experimental laboratory for modernist residential design. It is renowned for its innovative use of space and materials, including a striking glass façade and flexible interior layouts. Design aspects:
 - Modular interior spaces
 - Large sliding glass doors
 - Integration of workspaces and living areas
 - Emphasis on transparency and light
- 4. Kauffmann House (1936) Another notable example of Neutra's residential architecture, this house showcases his focus on visual transparency and indoor-outdoor connectivity. The design emphasizes horizontality and open interior spaces.
