Donald R. McCreary and Joan C. Chrisler: The development of gender studies in psychology. Studies of sex differences are as old as the field of psychology and they have been conducted in every sub-field of the discipline. There are probably many reasons for the popularity of these studies but three reasons seem to be most prominent. First, social psychological studies of person perception show that sex is especially salient in social groups; it is the first thing people notice about others and it is one of the things we remember best. Fiske and Haslam (1991), Stangor, Lynch, and Duan-Glass (1992), for example, found that people may not remember who uttered a witty remark but they are likely to remember whether the quip came from a woman or a man. Second, many people hold firm beliefs that aspects of physiology suit men and women for particular social roles. Men's greater upper body strength makes them better candidates for manual labor and their greater height gives the impression that they would make good leaders, i.e. people we look up to. Women's reproductive capacity and the caretaking tasks, e.g. breastfeeding, baby minding, that accompany it make them seem suitable for other roles that require gentleness and nurturance. Third, the logic that underlies hypothesis testing in the sciences is focused on difference. Researchers design their studies with the hope that they can reject the null hypothesis that experimental groups do not differ.

Seminar paper from the year 2003 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies, Linguistics, Grade 2.0. Humboldt University of Berlin, Anglistics/American Studies course. The linguistic situation in the USA. 7 entries in the bibliography. Language: English. Abstract: The belief in sex differences has a long tradition. Researchers of social scientists have helped to create and confirm this belief and have helped to develop theories which stress differences rather than similarities. Robin Lakoff was one of the first linguists who proposed that women's speech style is a powerless style. She introduced the term women's language which implies that women and men speak different languages. Lakoff and others have claimed that differences in male and female language have their source in early childhood socialisation. The assertiveness training movement which emerged in the 1970s was first established to help people who have communication problems and was later designed especially for women to solve their alleged problems of speech style. In the 1980s another approach gained popularity. The origins lie in the work of the linguist

john gumperz the two cultures approach maintains that communication between women and men is communication across cultures because the reasons for misunderstanding between them are similar to those of ethnic groups more recent works of elizabeth aries and mary crawford challenge these approaches and demonstrate that similarities between men and women are far greater than differences in this paper i want to discuss several approaches to gender differences and try to answer the questions whether there are differences in male female communication and what the causes are for these differences
