contributions by leading archaeologists and historians pay tribute to Paul Bidwell, admired for his ground-breaking work both in the south-west and the military north of Roman Britain. This collection will be essential reading for anyone with an interest in either the civil or military aspects of Roman Britain or the frontiers of the Roman Empire.

an up to date and in depth historical study of the northern roman frontier in britain why was the military conquest of scotland never completed and what were the criteria governing roman policy over the centuries the idea of the roman frontier immediately conjures up pictures of hadrian s wall with its forts and other remains and of the antonine wall in scotland these two structures however represent two elements in a story which took a great deal longer to evolve and which if taken in isolation tend to mask a clear appraisal of the way in which the frontier in britain actually developed what after all did the romans want to achieve in britain why did they not capitalise on agricola s victory at mons graupius in ad83 to subdue the entire country once and for all how did the idea for a physical barrier evolve and why after all the effort of building hadrian s wall did the emperor antoninus pius embark upon fresh conquest in scotland this book is intended primarily as an historical treatment of the roman military occupation in britain up until the early third century ad although it does also describe the later history of the frontier zone it draws upon archaeological evidence but is not intended as a guide to the remains of hadrian s and antonine s walls rather it aims to set these spectacular fortifications into the broader context of roman military plans the antonine wall has been visible as an upstanding earthwork across the central belt of scotland between forth clyde since its construction by the roman legions over 1850 years ago early in the reign of the roman emperor antoninus pius this book takes up its story from the time of its abandonment in the reign of pius successor marcus aurelius and charts developments in our knowledge about it through the middle ages and after up to the early years of the twentieth century by which time the earliest scientific excavations had taken place finds from the frontier includes papers by many of the leading finds specialists working on roman material culture in britain today with unparalleled knowledge of roman sites in both britain and europe book jacket at the frontiers of the roman empire military settlements had a profound influence on local crafting traditions legions were not just fighting units they contained a large number of craftsmen and the fortress would have been a centre of manufacturing activity a timber legionary fortress for example required vast numbers of nails many of which would have been made by legionary smiths on site and an army of thousands would require many more pots shoes and tents than could be produced by local domestic potters and leather workers but can all developments in local craft and industry be seen as a result of the appearance of the roman army the ten papers in this volume focus on craft production in roman yorkshire and the evidence for the role of the army in local manufacturing activities several papers examine broad questions surrounding the organisation and scale of production in urban and rural areas others consider the local evidence for individual materials and production processes including those associated with pottery glass copper alloys non ferrous metals leather jet and building stone
