process with a wide array of contributions from academics such as Stephen Billet, Tara Fenwick and Victoria Marsick this volume will be an important research and reference tool with all those academics and practitioners who are interested in the field of human resource development targeted at researchers, post graduate students and reflective practitioners and managers interested in the area workplace learning provides must read material for anyone wanting to advance the theory, research and/or practice of learning in the workplace.

The volume comprises a variety of research approaches that seek to explore and understand employees' learning and development through and for work. Working life reveals challenges through technological, economic and societal development that can only rudimentarily be addressed by formal education and training. Workplace learning becomes more and more important for employees and enterprises to successfully cope with these challenges. Workplace learning is a steadily growing field of educational research but it lacks so far a scholastic canon. There is rather a diversity of research approaches. This volume reflects this diversity by bringing together researchers from different countries and different theoretical backgrounds presenting their current research on topics that all are relevant for understanding presages, processes and outcomes of workplace learning. Hence this volume is of relevance for researchers as well as practitioners in the field and policy makers.

Published under the Garamond imprint, this innovative book is concerned with the power relations, complexities and contradictions in the paid workplace. Workplace learning is not value free or politically neutral and cannot be studied independently of the political economy of work. Workplace learning is part of a growing body of work that offers an alternative to mainstream approaches to workplace learning, recognizing that power relations, politics and conflicts of interest all shape learning. The authors emphasize the lived experiences of working people, avoiding prescriptive accounts and uncritical human resource development views. Comments here is a map through contested and largely uncharted terrain from the foreword by Darcy Martin.

During the 1990s the workplace was rediscovered as a rich source of learning. The issue of workplace learning has since received increasing attention from academics and practitioners alike but is still under researched empirically. This book brings together a range of state of the art research papers addressing interventions to support learning in the workplace. The authors are experienced international scholars who have an interest in making HRD and workplace learning practices more evidence based through practical, relevant research. Although workplace learning is largely an autonomous process, many organizations want to manage it as part of their broader HRD strategy. There are limits, however, to the extent to which the complex dynamics of learning in the workplace can be guided in pre-determined, desirable directions. This tension between the possible strengths of workplace learning and the limits of managing it is at the heart of this volume. The book is broken into three sections. The first section deals with workplace learning interventions including HRD practitioners' strategies, training and development activities and e-learning programs. The second section investigates the impact of social support or lack thereof in workplace learning such as mentoring, coaching and socialization practices. The third section addresses collective learning in the workplace, looking at teams, knowledge, productivity and collaborative capability building.
