as the united states continues to be a nation of immigrants and their children the nation's school systems face increased enrollments of students whose primary language is not english with the 2001 reauthorization of the elementary and secondary education act ese in the no child left behind act nclb the allocation of federal funds for programs to assist these students to be proficient in english became formula based 80 percent on the basis of the population of children with limited english proficiency1 and 20 percent on the basis of the population of recently immigrated children and youth title iii of nclb directs the u s department of education to allocate funds on the basis of the more accurate of two allowable data sources the number of students reported to the federal government by each state education agency or data from the american community survey acs the department determined that the acs estimates are more accurate and since 2005 those data have been basis for the federal distribution of title iii funds subsequently analyses of the two data sources have raised concerns about that decision especially because the two allowable data sources would allocate quite different amounts to the states in addition while shortcomings were noted in the data provided by the states the acs estimates were shown to fluctuate between years causing concern among the states about the unpredictability and unevenness of program funding in this context the u s department of education commissioned the national research council to address the accuracy of the estimates from the two data sources and the factors that influence the estimates the resulting book also considers means of increasing the accuracy of the data sources or alternative data sources that could be used for allocation purposes in this dissertation i investigate how community context affects spanish language use and english proficiency among latina and latino children in the united states focusing on the children of immigrants i view children's language attributes through a sociological perspective that recognizes that children learn and use languages within specific social and cultural contexts and that these contexts have an important effect on language acquisition and use this theoretical perspective leads to the hypothesis that children's language skills and language use will be affected by the communities they live in i predict that living in a metropolitan area with a greater propinquity and availability of spanish speakers will increase a child's likelihood of speaking spanish because this will increase opportunities for using and hearing spanish and promote spanish within a larger united states context that often devalues languages other than english at the same time i hypothesize that community context will have little effect on children's english skills because of the ubiquitous presence of english in the daily life of any u s child i test these hypotheses using a national sample of children who live in metropolitan areas drawn from the 1990 census i find that levels of spanish maintenance are extremely high among children of latina o immigrants and that a large majority of children who are born in the u s speak english fluently multivariate analysis demonstrates that several dimensions of a metropolitan area's language context in particular the saturation and segregation of spanish speakers have a strong effect on second generation children's likelihood of speaking spanish that persists even after controlling for household and individual level variables contrary to my original hypothesis i also find that the language characteristics of the metropolitan area have a significant effect on children's English proficiency. This effect, however, is smaller than the effect of metropolitan context on Spanish use. This analysis produces a better understanding of the specific elements of household and community context that affect language use. The results imply that children of immigrants are following multiple paths to language adaptation and that metropolitan context is an important influence on this process of adaptation.

case study from the year 2016 in the subject English language and literature studies linguistics grade a international Islamic university malaysian course bachelor of arts honours English for international communication language English abstract the purpose of this study is to investigate the factors affecting the level of English proficiency among international Islamic university malaysian iiium undergraduate students a set of questionnaires were distributed online and data from a sample of 75 students were collected through google forms two demographic factors namely gender and years of learning English were used as the variables the finding of the study suggests that the factors affecting the level of English proficiency among iiium undergraduate students were not affected by gender but were affected by the duration of learning English the factors that were contributing to the level of English proficiency among iiium undergraduate students were language anxiety students attitude and also peers parental and teacher influences besides the study also revealed that there is no significant relationship between cultural stereotypes and students performance in second language acquisition the level of English proficiency among malaysian students are often questioned despite learning English for almost 10 years in school the majority of malaysian students still encounter difficulties in using the language effectively especially in tertiary education many local graduates are still unemployed due to their lack of fluency in English
