considerable evidence suggests that many people for whom insurance is worth purchasing do not have coverage and others who appear not to need financial protection against certain events actually have purchased coverage there are certain types of events for which one might expect to see insurance widely marketed are now viewed today by insurers as uninsurable and there are other policies one might not expect to be successfully marketed that exist on a relatively large scale in addition evidence suggests that cost effective preventive measures are sometimes rewarded by insurers in ways that could change their clients behavior these examples reveal that insurance purchasing and marketing activities do not always produce results that are in the best interest of individuals at risk insurance decision making and market behavior discusses such behavior with the intent of categorizing these insurance anomalies it represents a first step in constructing a theory of insurance decision making to explain behavior that does not conform to standard economic models of choice and decision making finally the authors propose a set of prescriptive solutions for improving insurance decision making
