women make up only 8 of fortune 500 ceos in the 21st century women make up half of the workforce have access to the same educational channels and have proven that they are just as talented and capable as their male counterparts yet women are barely moving the meter at the executive level why is that women mentoring women addresses a primary issue that author michelle renaldo ferguson believes holds women back lack of mentorship high level leaders have the knowledge and expertise to assist and train lower level professionals in business to prepare them to advance in their careers while education plays a role in helping women land a job understanding the business culture helps them climb the ladder of success women mentoring women lays out the reasons mentorship is necessary with real life examples that have helped junior executives explains types of partnerships and how to benefit from collaborations why selfish mentoring should be a regular practice if you are someone who wants to maximize your time with your company wants to pursue a higher position or believes you have the knowledge to help someone in a junior position women mentoring women is an invaluable resource for your library the purpose of this study was to examine the lived experience of ten business and professional women who have experienced a mentoring relationship as a mentor or protegee with another woman to understand the essence of their mentoring experience and to know more about their participation as mentors this study began with the assumption that women who experienced mentoring whether from women or men would be active mentors themselves however the data reveal an important contradiction since women are entering the business and professional ranks of the work force at an increasing pace there are greater numbers of women who have reached positions of influence and are in situations to mentor other women likewise there is also an increase in the number of women entering professions who may benefit from a mentoring relationship especially as it concerns their workplace satisfaction and professional development thus those who promote mentoring need to know more about its practice this qualitative study took a phenomenological approach to examine mentoring experiences the data were collected during conversations that developed into narratives this approach enabled these women participants to reflect deeply on their own mentoring experiences and to consider how they in turn mentor others these women narrated their mentoring experiences as they examined the influences of family education and gender as well as their work part of this examination considered the historical context which has otherwise been repressive to women's development in general and to their career development in particular for these women aged thirty eight to fifty seven there are two major implications of this study first while these women are interested in mentoring participate in and enjoy mentoring and recognize the benefits of mentoring they lack a commitment to specifically mentor other women second this phenomenological methodology promoted their understanding about the way they seem to distance themselves from mentoring even though they believe they benefited from their own mentoring experiences the 21st century has brought a new urgency for christian women to search for meaningful relationships where they can live out their faith this is due in part to our increasingly secular lifestyle and the radical changes in marriage and family life that have isolated and discouraged many women women mentoring women offers the solution to a chronic weakness in churches the lack of involvement of wives sisters mothers and daughters in vital women's ministries
