author joseph d harrington has written an informative and insightful history of the nisei second generation japanese americans working for the u s armed forces in the pacific during world war ii this is no whitewashed narrative as it exposes u s internment camps prejudices and the frustrations of patriotic japanese americans who wanted to fight for their country but were initially rebuffed

as the book relates not all nisei were in favor of fighting and even those that did encountered another kind of prejudice at first from hawaiian born nisei who more than occasionally felt that continental japanese americans just didn't measure up linguistically speaking like other children of immigrants the nisei were to a large extent caught between japanese tradition and u s culture the concept of honor an essential element in japanese american family life ended up serving u s military interests well the author has done an outstanding job of uncovering names and telling little known stories especially fascinating are the ones that describe the analytical acumen of nisei translators why can't i stop thinking about him misaki and arikawa are two men who are undeniably attracted to each other and when misaki finds himself unable to control his pent up feelings any longer he abruptly heads over to arikawa's apartment where he's faced with an equally restless arikawa just what will become of these two's wavering feelings i wonder what it feels like to be in an actual relationship with someone misaki and arikawa's feelings have finally made it through to one another however as misaki has never had a boyfriend before the whole situation has left him a bit perplexed regardless the love they feel for one another is strong enough to bring them to tears this is their love story
