in the era when the church was undergoing a great reformation there were three men who are known only to a few in our days but nonetheless three men who were blessed both with godly fear and understanding of holy scripture there was a prince a preacher and a professor through these three men god provided his people with leadership and instruction we who live so many years later still benefit from the labours of these men for it is they who wrote our beloved catechism in this we see god s covenant faithfulness in that he continues to preserve the faith of the fathers and gives it to the children as an inheritance through the generations this is the first of two volumes that were written to teach adolescents about the heidelberg catechism each lord s day is explained and followed by a series of questions to promote reflection and discussion this work on the heidelberg catechism is intended to give the new light that has been thrown on the catechism mainly within the last fifty years since the tercentenary jubilee was held in 1863 by the reformed church in the united states however it also includes some light previous to that time but which does not seem to have attracted the attention of the american writers on the catechism preface the heidelberg catechism first appeared in the year 1563 and soon won for itself a sort of universal authority in the church that no similar system has since been able to supplant its relation to the reformed church was soon allowed to be parallel in this respect with that of the venerable catechism of luther to the lutheran church a distinction not admitted before in favor even of the catechism of geneva hence it is denominated at times the reformed catechism as representing by general acknowledgment the faith of the entire communion distinguished by the same title in the sixteenth century it is much more indeed than a catechism in the ordinary sense being so constructed as to serve at the same time the purpose of a full church confession it stands forth accordingly with special prominence not only among the catechisms but among the regular confessions also of the period to which it belongs in this view it holds we may say the very highest distinction if the question be asked which among all the symbolical books that have appeared in the reformed church has the best claim to be regarded in the light of an ecumenical or general symbol the answer must be given undoubtedly that it is the heidelberg catechism such we find to be in fact the clear judgment of history itself though formed originally for the use of a particular territory only the catechism proved to be a true and happy exposition of the faith of the reformed church in general and in a short time accordingly it came to be recognized and honored as such all over europe where it was not exalted formally to the rank of a symbolical book it was at least invested with the highest credit as a work embodying in the most approved form the doctrines of the church at large the authority of the prince under whose direction it was prepared was sufficient indeed to bring it into general use in the church of the palatinate but this authority could have no force beyond these limits its favorable reception in other lands could be owing only to its own intrinsic worth and the ready concurrence in its doctrine and spirit which it met with from the reformed church in every direction it was received indeed with a sort of universal homage as an ornament to the creed which it was felt so well to represent switzerland france scotland and england joined in testifying towards it their admiration and respect it was translated for the use of schools and churches in hungary it became the basis of religious instruction for the reformed church generally in germany in the netherlands it was clothed with the highest authority in being made to constitute along with the belgic confession the national rule of faith finally by the synod of dort the general council of the entire reformed church in the beginning of the seventeenth century it was formally acknowledged and sanctioned as a fair and proper representation of the reformed faith in all lands it became thus in form to a certain extent the accredited standard of the church as a whole in all this we see the true importance of the heidelberg catechism the relation which it bears to the whole reformed church of the sixteenth century is full of interest and such as may well make it an object of special regard in all ages no other catechism or confession comes down to us under the same broad catholic character or with equal claims in the view now mentioned to historical attention and respect
