armies and navies of the large agrarian bureaucratic empires of asia focusing on the question of how far the asian polities were able to integrate gunpowder weapons in their military systems military transition in early modern asia 1400 1750 offers important insights into the common patterns in war making across the region and the impact of firearms and artillery

the early modern period saw gunpowder weapons reach maturity and become a central feature of european warfare on land and at sea this exciting collection of essays brings together a distinguished and varied selection of modern scholarship on the transformation of war often described as a military revolution during the period between 1450 and 1660

it is commonplace that warfare was integral to the european expansion pitting the superiorities of the european against the inferiorities of the native the aim of this book is to look deeper and to examine the technological political and economic structures and capacities of the competing forces that shaped their ability to wage war and the impact that colonial wars had on european and non european states and societies alike questions of the extent to which one side could adapt its military institutions tactics and technology to those of its opponents figure prominently this was far from an inevitable one way process and environment and disease remained vital factors the studies also situate these conflicts within the broader debate concerning the so called military revolution and show that our ideas of this need to be reconsidered in the light of what was happening outside europe
