my thesis asks what it means to live a christian existence i argue that the christian life is well considered as a constant activity in perpetual distance from the freezing definitions of contextual understanding furthermore my work argues that the life of the christian is intimately tied to a relationship with anxiety and guilt that are due to an inevitable failure to abide in this activity that is a life before the divine the christian life is thus one in which the parousia and the need for constant confession are symbiotic the work begins with two discussions of meister eckhart s radical theology the first considers his understanding of god as the sole source of existence and the second his profound offering that the prime christian virtue is detachment i then strengthen this foundational reading with kierkegaard s reflections on freedom guilt anxiety confession ignorant love and perhaps above all his notion of indirect communication as essential to the proper freedom of one blessed by an existence in relation to the offensiveness of christ through these many components eventually offer a kierkegaardian view of the christian life as a life of joyous yet suffering failure my work culminates in a discussion of heidegger discussion of the parousia in paul s letters to the thessalonians i believe that all of these central threads of heidegger s work on hearing the silent call of conscience as a central voice in one s approach and concern for their own being what it means to be full of merits and yet to poetically dwell and what it is to think as a meditative being are deeply informed and well read through his early account of christian facticity and the continual waiting birth of christ and this project too for heidegger is deeply informed by the relationship that all authentic human beings have to their own sense of inauthenticity that the truth of us is also present in the ways we are false four renowned biblical scholar present seven essays on the gospels and epistles considered as valid sources of facts concerning christ s life and death they discuss the character of each evangelist and disciple the audience for whom he wrote his agreement with and his difference from other evangelists the time between christ s resurrection and the recording of it by the evangelist and the relative organization and style of his work they trace the fascinating layers of accretion in the writings themselves the events of christ s life were first entrusted to the apostles who handed them on orally to the churches the churches in turn constructed short homilies which were based on theological or liturgical points the first syntheses followed finally the evangelists collected these works and organized them around a theological theme
