how colleges and universities can live up to their ideals of diversity and why inclusivity and excellence go hand in hand most colleges and universities embrace the ideals of diversity and inclusion but many fall short especially in the hiring retention and advancement of faculty who would more fully represent our diverse world in particular women and people of color in this book abigail stewart and virginia valian argue that diversity and excellence go hand in hand and provide guidance for achieving both stewart and valian themselves senior academics support their argument with comprehensive data from a range of disciplines they show why merit is often overlooked they offer statistics and examples of individual experiences of exclusion such as being left out of crucial meetings and they outline institutional practices that keep exclusion invisible including reliance on proxies for excellence such as prestige that disadvantage outstanding candidates who are not members of the white male majority perhaps most important stewart and valian provide practical advice for overcoming obstacles to inclusion this advice is based on their experiences at their own universities their consultations with faculty and administrators at many other institutions and data on institutional change stewart and valian offer recommendations for changing structures and practices so that people become successful in ways that benefit everyone they describe better ways of searching for job candidates evaluating candidates for hiring tenure and promotion helping faculty succeed and broadening rewards and recognition

breaks new ground regarding how to think about colonial encounters in innovative ways that pay attention to a wide range of issues from health and demography to identity formations and adaptation. Debra I. Martin, coeditor of The Bioarchaeology of Violence, amply demonstrates the breadth and variability of the impact of colonialism. Ken Nystrom (State University of New York at New Paltz) European expansion into the New World fundamentally altered indigenous populations. The collision between East and West led to the most recent human adaptive transition that spread around the world. Paradoxically, these are some of the least scientifically understood processes of the human past, representing a new generation of contact and colonialism studies. This volume expands on the traditional focus on the health of conquered peoples by considering how extraordinary biological and cultural transformations were incorporated into the human body and reflected in behavior, identity, and adaptation by examining changes in diet, mortuary practices, and diseases. These globally diverse case studies demonstrate that the effects of conquest reach further than was ever thought before to both the colonized and the colonizers. People on all sides of colonial contact became entangled in cultural and biological transformations of social identities, foodways, social structures, and gene pools at points of contact and beyond. Contributors to this volume illustrate previously unknown and variable effects of colonialism by analyzing skeletal remains and burial patterns from never before studied regions in the Americas to the Middle East, Africa, and Europe. The result is the first step toward a new synthesis of archaeology and bioarchaeology. Contributors: Rosabella Alvarez Calderón, Elliot H. Blair, María Fernanda Boza, Michele R. Using the recent turn to ecology as a starting point, Hannah Richter and Elisa Randazzo bring ecological thinking into contact with critical indigenous studies in which

awareness of the necessity for sustainable relations between humans and non humans has long preceded western anthropocene discourse currently the drastic ecological changes labelled as the anthropocene not only increasingly shape the political awareness and the priorities of citizens and governments but also inform a large body of social scientific scholarship indigenous scholarship and practice in particular ecological adaptability is intrinsically related to power structures and political struggle hence indigenous understanding of anthropocene discourses are intertwined with discourses of colonialism and political contestation this book problematises the depoliticising character of western anthropocene discourses in relation to indigenous ecologies the authors reveal how the anti colonial struggles of indigenous communities and the unequal distribution of responsibilities for and suffering from ecological change are concealed and devalued in western discourses of the anthropocene
